Brett:

Welcome! I understand from National Archives that you may be handling Presidential Records Act (PRA) issues for the White House Counsel's Office. Allow me to introduce myself - - I am the Deputy General Counsel in the Office of Administration (OA) and have served as the point of contact on Federal Records Act (FRA) issues, including issues related to the records management of the ARMS system, which archives e-mail for the EOP. In case you are unfamiliar with OA, we provide common administrative support to the agencies and offices of the Executive Office of the President (EOP), including records management support, and are an excellent source of corporate knowledge of the policies/practices of prior Administrations. Please let me know if I can be of any assistance to you. As soon of you are settled, it may be helpful for us to discuss how the Bush Administration would like to treat WHO records in the custody of OA, given that we are subject to the Freedom of Information Act and WHO is not. Again, welcome to the EOP and please feel free to call me at x51270 if you need anything.

Regards,

Kate Anderson

I just met with Brett Cavanaugh, the attorney we met with along with Judge Gonzales. Brett is our point person on ethics issues. They expect to have a formal opinion, and be able to conduct a briefing, on Wenesday. They are taking a bit longer to look at ethical as well as legal considerations, and to review past Administration practices.

However, here are the outlines of the policy they expect to propose:
1. No fundraising, or discussion of fundraising, on federal property. No exceptions for RNC laptops or cell phones. Donor information should not be on government computers.

2. They will recommend separate laptops and phone lines for all staff at OPA and other staff we recommend at OPL and OSI. However, we only need to use this RNC equipment for election related activity. They seem to be interpretting election-related activity rather narrowly.

3. We can email back and forth and discuss RNC activities, provided that it is not fundraising or directly election related.

4. We can build databases but not share these with the RNC.

5. The Anti-Lobbying Act only prohibits telling others to call Congress directly. It does not include building grassroots support.

6. Polling information generated by the RNC can be shared inside the White House. However, White House generated polling can't be shared with the RNC.

ALL OF THIS IS SUBJECT TO POSSIBLE CHANGE WITH FURTHER RESEARCH.

Brett: Is this accurate?

I'm not sure I know what the question is. If the sponsorship is being done at the request of the Government, there could be a coercion or misuse of office question. If they are doing something the Government should be paying for, there is an appropriation issue.

We will be dropping off the updated version of your section for you to proof and make any additional changes. Once we get everyone's changes to the various sections we will also provide counsel a draft copy of the entire staff manual for review so that you can review in its entirety. The current timeline we are working on is to provide Joe Hagin a draft copy sometime tomorrow afternoon - this will also be when you get a draft copy as well.

Any questions or concerns please feel free to contact me at 6-5400.

FYI - that I have brought this to the attention of the press shop and will provide to them a copy of our response.

Yes, Viet did write a book review article on that subject. For what it is worth, I also have published on the EP and related issues in a Georgetown LJ article and I obviously have litigated the issue far more than he has. Also, Tim has dealt extensively with these issues as well. And of course, OLC is involved. So I guess my preference would be to keep this issue in-house (with OLC) for now, at least until Viet signs on at a DOJ job, as I would anticipate he will soon. There will be a lot of cooks in the kitchen regardless -- and a lot of experienced cooks at that.

I will review your memo and get you comments but I believe Viet Dinh could be helpful in this area. As I recall, he has written somewhat extensively on it.

I wonder if we could consider soliciting his help to review the matter as a volunteer in our office (just on this issue)?

Hey Vance,
Before I forget, I talked to my friend Richard Norton Smith last night about the issue of how the National Archives are advising us on records. He said the key question that Albert Gonzalez, et.al, should ask the Archives is: "What is a personal record?" He said unless we ask the question, they won't volunteer the answer. But if we do ask the question, they have to give us the same answer--and same standard--they gave the Clinton administration. In the Clinton administration, there was a clear distinction between important presidential documents and everything else. So there is a precedent. But we have to ask for it.
Again, thanks for your help in this. I hope this is helpful to you and that I am not doing something I shouldn't be doing. But I feel like Don Wilson and Richard Smith really have our best interests at heart.

Subject: e-mail from Rove with news-article links

If the Rove staff sends e-mails with links to news articles, they may be causing a copyright infringement. This area of law is completely unsettled, but there is a lively debate among academics on this very question. Some say that providing a link is like citing an article in a footnote; hence, no copyright infringement. Many others argue that providing a link causes unauthorized copying, distribution, and display of the copyrighted material that is the subject of the link.
One of the reasons that the operator of a news website might care about such a link is that the link might access an interior webpage, rather than the site's front page, thereby by-passing advertisements that the reader would view if he entered through the front page.
We might have some protection under the fair-use doctrine, although some academics disagree.
In any event, I don't think we want to be the test case on this issue. Therefore, I would advise against providing links within e-mails without first obtaining the permission of the news source to which we want to provide a link. We could, of course, simply cite the article without providing the link.

Who in Rove's office should I contact re this issue?

Libby, here is the draft text of a form letter I would propose to send out to individuals submitting their views on judicial selection matters.
Please show it to the judge and Tim and let me know if it is acceptable.
We will begin sending out letters as soon as this is made final.

Dear :

On behalf of President Bush and the Counsel to the President Alberto R. Gonzales, I acknowledge receipt of your recent submission in connection with prospective appointments to fill judicial vacancies on the [name of Court]. Please be assured that our office will give due consideration to your views. In the event additional information from you would be helpful to the judicial selection process, we will contact you directly. In the meantime, please accept my thanks on behalf of the President for your input.

Sincerely,

Bradford A. Berenson
Associate Counsel to the President

Six Term Democratic Congressman Tim Roemer not Seeking Re-election

District Showing Republican Trend

Coddy Johnson
White House Associate Political Director—Central States

Congressman Tim Roemer announced on January 26, 2001 that he would not seek re-election to Indiana's 3rd Congressional District. Roemer's retirement follows an unexpectedly close 2000 election in his Republican turning district. He faced Republican newcomer Chris Chocola and won by just 4%. His narrow 2000 victory showed the district's Republican trend.

Once composed of heavily unionized industrial workforces, South Bend and Michigan City have adapted to take advantage of the smaller high-tech industries now prevalent across the border in Northern Illinois. With over 40% of its population employed by these new industries, the 3rd CD has become a swing district.

Also, due to reapportionment, Indiana will lose a congressional seat next cycle. Population flow may require that the 3rd CD expand westward into heavily Republican LaGrange, Noble, and Kosciusko counties, and if Congressman Visclosky (D, IN-1) fights to expand his district into the most heavily Democratic sections of the 3rd CD, this District could well be Republican next cycle.

GOP Captures Missouri State Senate

GOP Makes Inroads in Missouri

Coddy Johnson
White House Associate Political Director—Central States

Due to retirements, two special elections were held Tuesday, November 24, 2000. Republicans won two of the three – in the 12th and 18th districts, respectively. With their victories, Missouri State Senator John Cauthorn and Missouri State Senator David Klindt, allowed the GOP to capture the Missouri State Senate for the first time in 52 years.

With a Republican State Senate, the GOP can now begin to repair the damage of the last Administrations fiscal irresponsibility.

New Voter Group Has Emerged

New Economy Voters/Wired Workers

Office of Strategic Initiatives

With a growing segment of the population working in technology-related jobs and 42 million workers now with Internet access, many pollsters and political pundits believe a new voter group has emerged. Referred to as both "wired workers" and "New Economy" voters, this group is an estimated 20 to 33 percent of the electorate.

According to Pew Research Center, "wired workers" are more likely to be younger, highly educated and male and work in suburban office parks. 40% describe themselves as independent, compared to 27% of all voters. Business Week describes these "New Economy" voters as socially moderate to liberal (pro-choice, pro-environment, anti-gun) and fiscally conservative (attracted by tax cuts, vouchers, social security reform). They generally oppose programs that guarantee outcomes, such as affirmative action and welfare.

A DLC post-election survey conducted November 11-12 by Clinton pollster Mark Penn showed that "wired workers" favored President Bush over Vice President Gore. The DLC survey revealed that "wired workers" were strongly attracted by President Bush's commitment to change Washington's tone. And by a 6 to 1 margin, these voters said that the role of government is to equip people to solve their own problems rather solving people's problems and protecting them from adversity. In his analysis, Penn posits that Gore's populist message turned off many wired workers.

As computer and Internet access continue toward ubiquity, the group may grow so large that it simply mirrors the electorate as a whole. However, its emergence in 2000 clearly signals a workforce transformation that (i) may diminish the class-based divisions of the Old Economy and (ii) present a challenge in communicating with workers who get information from non-traditional sources.

Washington Leaders Unanimously Endorse Bush Tax Plan

Washington Republicans Approve Tax Plan

Dave Thomas
White House Associate Political Director—Western States

Forty-nine House and 24 Senate Republican members of the Washington State Legislature unanimously endorsed the tax plan sent to Congress last week by President Bush.

House Co-Speaker Clyde Ballard announced, "It's about people and their right to keep more of the money they earn. The citizens of Washington have made it clear, with overwhelming approval of recent tax-cut initiatives, that government has enough of their money. The President's decision to give relief to taxpayers is in tune with the message that the people of Washington have been sending us."

Along with Ballard, Senate Minority Leader James West wrote to President Bush, "Your commitment and dedication to the quality of life of all citizens of the United States signals a welcome new form of leadership, one that embraces the American people and reaffirms our trust…America's best and brightest days do lie ahead."

Latino Families On-Board with Bush Tax Plan

POTUS Appeal Among Latinos Continues

Sara Taylor
White House Associate Political Director—Midwestern States

Last week more than 20 families around the country traveled to the White House for a tax family reunion with President Bush.

Among them, the Terrazus family of NM, the Hector, Melow and Fuller families of Florida, and the Ramos family of Pennsylvania joined the President to hear once again that he would make good on his promise to cut taxes.

South Carolina and Louisiana Democrats Join GOP

POTUS Reaching Across Party Lines

Kelley McCullough
White House Associate Political Director—Southern States

In South Carolina, Lt. Governor Bob Peeler was a key player in bringing Senator Verne Smith of Greer to the Republican Party, thus giving the GOP control of the State Senate.

Following in the same footsteps, President Bush welcomed Louisiana Democrats, including State Representative Hunt Downer of Houma, State Senator Robert Barham of Oak Ridge, Sheriff Gregory Champaign of St. Charles Parish and New Iberia Mayor Ruth Fontenot to the White House Friday to commemorate their decision to join the GOP.

Barham's party switch is seen as a strong signal for a possible run for Congress in the 5th District, while political insiders speculate that Downer is headed for a gubernatorial run in 2003.

Louisiana Party Switchers Meet with President Bush in the Roosevelt Room of the White House

Latinos Approve Tax Plan

Paul Terrazus an Albuquerque resident and University of New Mexico computer lab manager told reporters that he and his family could use some tax relief. "That would make a very nice summer vacation each year for us witout having to cut corners," he said. Under the plan his family would save $1,400 per year.

Six Term Democratic Congressman Tim Roemer not Seeking Re-election

District Showing Republican Trend

Coddy Johnson
White House Associate Political Director—Central States

Congressman Tim Roemer announced on January 26, 2001 that he would not seek re-election to Indiana's 3rd Congressional District. Roemer's retirement follows an unexpectedly close 2000 election in his Republican turning district. He faced Republican newcomer Chris Chocola and won by just 4%. His narrow 2000 victory showed the district's Republican trend.

Once composed of heavily unionized industrial workforces, South Bend and Michigan City have adapted to take advantage of the smaller high-tech industries now prevalent across the border in Northern Illinois. With over 40% of its population employed by these new industries, the 3rd CD has become a swing district.

Also, due to reapportionment, Indiana will lose a congressional seat next cycle. Population flow may require that the 3rd CD expand westward into heavily Republican LaGrange, Noble, and Kosciusko counties, and if Congressman Visclosky (D, IN-1) fights to expand his district into the most heavily Democratic sections of the 3rd CD, this District could well be Republican next cycle.

GOP Captures Missouri State Senate

GOP Makes Inroads in Missouri

Coddy Johnson
White House Associate Political Director—Central States

Due to retirements, two special elections were held Tuesday, November 24, 2000. Republicans won two of the three – in the 12th and 18th districts, respectively. With their victories, Missouri State Senator John Cauthorn and Missouri State Senator David Klindt, allowed the GOP to capture the Missouri State Senate for the first time in 52 years.

With a Republican State Senate, the GOP can now begin to repair the damage of the last Administrations fiscal irresponsibility.

New Voter Group Has Emerged

New Economy Voters/Wired Workers

Office of Strategic Initiatives

With a growing segment of the population working in technology-related jobs and 42 million workers now with Internet access, many pollsters and political pundits believe a new voter group has emerged. Referred to as both "wired workers" and "New Economy" voters, this group is an estimated 20 to 33 percent of the electorate.

According to Pew Research Center, "wired workers" are more likely to be younger, highly educated and male and work in suburban office parks. 40% describe themselves as independent, compared to 27% of all voters. Business Week describes these "New Economy" voters as socially moderate to liberal (pro-choice, pro-environment, anti-gun) and fiscally conservative (attracted by tax cuts, vouchers, social security reform). They generally oppose programs that guarantee outcomes, such as affirmative action and welfare.

A DLC post-election survey conducted November 11-12 by Clinton pollster Mark Penn showed that "wired workers" favored President Bush over Vice President Gore. The DLC survey revealed that "wired workers" were strongly attracted by President Bush's commitment to change Washington's tone. And by a 6 to 1 margin, these voters said that the role of government is to equip people to solve their own problems rather solving people's problems and protecting them from adversity. In his analysis, Penn posits that Gore's populist message turned off many wired workers.

VOTERS WHO USE THE INTERNET
Bush	49
Gore	47	Source: VNS

As computer and Internet access continue toward ubiquity, the group may grow so large that it simply mirrors the electorate as a whole. However, its emergence in 2000 clearly signals a workforce transformation that (i) may diminish the class-based divisions of the Old Economy and (ii) present a challenge in communicating with workers who get information from non-traditional sources.

Washington Leaders Unanimously Endorse Bush Tax Plan

Washington Republicans Approve Tax Plan

Dave Thomas
White House Associate Political Director—Western States

Forty-nine House and 24 Senate Republican members of the Washington State Legislature unanimously endorsed the tax plan sent to Congress last week by President Bush.

House Co-Speaker Clyde Ballard announced, "It's about people and their right to keep more of the money they earn. The citizens of Washington have made it clear, with overwhelming approval of recent tax-cut initiatives, that government has enough of their money. The President's decision to give relief to taxpayers is in tune with the message that the people of Washington have been sending us."

Along with Ballard, Senate Minority Leader James West wrote to President Bush, "Your commitment and dedication to the quality of life of all citizens of the United States signals a welcome new form of leadership, one that embraces the American people and reaffirms our trust…America's best and brightest days do lie ahead."

Latino Families On-Board with Bush Tax Plan

POTUS Appeal Among Latinos Continues

Sara Taylor
White House Associate Political Director—Midwestern States

Last week more than 20 families around the country traveled to the White House for a tax family reunion with President Bush.

Among them, the Terrazus family of NM, the Hector, Melow and Fuller families of Florida, and the Ramos family of Pennsylvania joined the President to hear once again that he would make good on his promise to cut taxes.

"This thing has no place to go but up."
--Rep. Jerry Kleczka (D-Wis) on President Bush's tax cut plan

South Carolina and Louisiana Democrats Join GOP

POTUS Reaching Across Party Lines

Kelley McCullough
White House Associate Political Director—Southern States

In South Carolina, Lt. Governor Bob Peeler was a key player in bringing Senator Verne Smith of Greer to the Republican Party, thus giving the GOP control of the State Senate.

Following in the same footsteps, President Bush welcomed Louisiana Democrats, including State Representative Hunt Downer of Houma, State Senator Robert Barham of Oak Ridge, Sheriff Gregory Champaign of St. Charles Parish and New Iberia Mayor Ruth Fontenot to the White House Friday to commemorate their decision to join the GOP.

Barham's party switch is seen as a strong signal for a possible run for Congress in the 5th District, while political insiders speculate that Downer is headed for a gubernatorial run in 2003.

Louisiana Party Switchers Meet with President Bush in the Roosevelt Room of the White House

Latinos Approve Tax Plan

Paul Terrazus an Albuquerque resident and University of New Mexico computer lab manager told reporters that he and his family could use some tax relief. "That would make a very nice summer vacation each year for us witout having to cut corners," he said. Under the plan his family would save $1,400 per year.

Alison -

Libby Camp here - I am Executive Assistant to Counsel to the President Al Gonzales.

Z and I finally got to talk just now about a letter we need to send out as soon as possible on Tuesday to Senators - Z and our Counsel guys will determine exactly who gets this letter (all Republican Senators, any Reps?)

Once that decision is made I need to work with you on the list, printing and delivery of letters - they will be signed by Al.

Wanted to let you know this very time sensitive project is coming your way and send you my number in case you have any questions.

Thanks!

As to the OPA mission statement, I have some minor questions about a few parts. Overall, much of this, of course, is classic political activity and as such is entirely permissible so long as we ensure the proper allotment of costs incurred as a result (and so long there is no fundraising or solicitation on government property).

These are prophylactic points, but I would delete "what the Bush Administration can do on these matters" on page 1. I would delete "grants and contracts" on page 2 under point 2. In the next to last bullet under point 2 on page 2, I would change "how the Administration can be helpful" to "how OPA and the RNC can be helpful."

As to the target state political plan, that looks entirely fine.

Dear Congressman «Last»:

President Bush has asked that we begin the process of evaluating candidates to fill existing vacancies in the federal courts. I am writing to advise you of the basic procedures the President intends to follow in states that have no Republican Senator, and to solicit your advice with respect to existing vacancies.

In states that do not have a Republican Senator, the President intends to exercise independent judgment and to make judicial selections that he deems to be in the long-term best interests of the judicial district or circuit in question and of the nation as a whole. You should be aware that presidential prerogative will be at its most robust with respect to nominations to the circuit courts of appeals. However, regardless of the court, President Bush welcomes input and suggestions from senior Republican representatives in Congress or other senior Republican elected officials in the state, and he intends to give serious consideration to all such input.

The input to which the President can be expected to accord the greatest deference is that which represents a consensus among the senior Republican officeholders in the state and/or are the result of a formal merit selection process designed to ensure uniformly excellent recommendations likely to find acceptance in the United States Senate. You may, of course, make whatever specific arrangements you wish with your colleagues and employ whatever procedures you deem appropriate, but the President will determine how much weight to give recommendations based upon a variety of factors relating to the fairness and quality of the procedures employed. Please advise my office promptly of whatever arrangements exist in your state so that my office and the Department of Justice may consult the proper parties.

President Bush has consistently said that he will appoint men and women to the federal bench who meet the highest standards of ethics and personal integrity, are recognized for their professional excellence, and believe in judicial restraint. It is essential that federal judges understand that under our system of separation of powers, judges should not legislate from the bench. These principles will guide his decisions on nominations and it is hoped that you will consider them as you make your recommendations.

President Bush requests that recommendations for judicial vacancies be forwarded to him in writing, with copies to the Attorney General and the Counsel to the President. Comments or questions concerning vacancies and the identification of suitable candidates to fill them may be directed to my office.

I look forward to working with you to ensure that upcoming appointments to the federal judiciary are of the very highest quality.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

Note that we have letters from the Democratic Senators in Wisconsin and Washington. In figuring how to address these letters in those states, we ought to take those communications into account. Rove's shop may also be helpful in identifying the proper addressee, understanding that the default is usually the senior Republican congressman, except perhaps in large states such as California and New York or states with politically important Republican Governors such as Michigan.

Subject: Draft letter to senior Republican congressmen on judicial selection

Attached is a draft letter for those states where there is no Republican Senator. Brett is preparing the list of Representatives to whom this should be sent. Please let me know if you have any comments. (Libby: since the Judge may not check his e-mail on a timely basis, you may want to print this out and put it in his hard-copy queue.) Thanks.

Dear Congressman «Last»:

President Bush has asked that we begin the process of evaluating candidates to fill existing vacancies in the federal courts. I am writing to advise you of the basic procedures the President intends to follow in states that have no Republican Senator, and to solicit your advice with respect to existing vacancies.

In states that do not have a Republican Senator, the President intends to exercise independent judgment and to make judicial selections that he deems to be in the long-term best interests of the judicial district or circuit in question and of the nation as a whole. You should be aware that presidential prerogative will be at its most robust with respect to nominations to the circuit courts of appeals. However, regardless of the court, President Bush welcomes input and suggestions from senior Republican representatives in Congress or other senior Republican elected officials in the state, and he intends to give serious consideration to all such input.

The input to which the President can be expected to accord the greatest deference is that which represents a consensus among the senior Republican officeholders in the state and/or are the result of a formal merit selection process designed to ensure uniformly excellent recommendations likely to find acceptance in the United States Senate. You may, of course, make whatever specific arrangements you wish with your colleagues and employ whatever procedures you deem appropriate, but the President will determine how much weight to give recommendations based upon a variety of factors relating to the fairness and quality of the procedures employed. Please advise my office promptly of whatever arrangements exist in your state so that my office and the Department of Justice may consult the proper parties.

President Bush has consistently said that he will appoint men and women to the federal bench who meet the highest standards of ethics and personal integrity, are recognized for their professional excellence, and believe in judicial restraint. It is essential that federal judges understand that under our system of separation of powers, judges should not legislate from the bench. These principles will guide his decisions on nominations and it is hoped that you will consider them as you make your recommendations.

President Bush requests that recommendations for judicial vacancies be forwarded to him in writing, with copies to the Attorney General and the Counsel to the President. Comments or questions concerning vacancies and the identification of suitable candidates to fill them may be directed to my office.

I look forward to working with you to ensure that upcoming appointments to the federal judiciary are of the very highest quality.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

There are a number of historical and other materials bearing upon the judicial nomination and confirmation process that we should get our hands on. If you would try to track these down and then provide copies to both me and Brett at your convenience, I would appreciate it.

1. The Code of Conduct for United States Judges.

2. Historical data on nominations and confirmations to the federal courts (especially since 1980) from the Federal Judicial Center.

3. A series of articles published from time to time in Judicature magazine by Professors Sheldon Goldman and Eliot Slotnick. If these are not available through our library or electronically, we might call Judicature or the profs, but please do not do this without checking with me and Brett first.

The library up on the 4th or 5th Floor ought to be able to help with a lot of this.

February __, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT STAFF

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

RE: Subpoenas and Document Requests

If the Executive Office of the President (EOP), or any component thereof, receives a document subpoena or document request from a congressional committee, court, or grand jury, the Counsel's Office will provide immediate notice and instructions to EOP officers and employees. The instructions will explain the appropriate steps for you to follow in preserving relevant documents and submitting them to the Counsel's office for production by the Counsel's office to the investigating authorities.

Once an EOP officer or employee learns (whether by notice from the Counsel's Office or otherwise) of such a subpoena or document request -- or learns that such a subpoena or document request is likely -- the individual should take extraordinary care to preserve any and all documents in his or her possession, custody, or control that conceivably could be encompassed by such a subpoena or document request. The consequences of knowingly failing to do so can be severe, including criminal prosecution.

It is critical to understand that you must comply with the specific requirements of any subpoena or document request. The requirements of a subpoena or document request override the provisions of the Presidential Records Act.

Finally, it is possible that an EOP officer or employee may personally receive a subpoena or request from a congressional investigating committee, court, or grand jury – that is, a subpoena or document request that is directed to him or her as an individual. In such a case, the employee must comply with that subpoena or request as required by law. To the extent the subpoena or document request calls for production of documents or testimony related to official work, however, the White House employee or his or her personal attorney should inform the Counsel's office immediately of the subpoena or document request so that appropriate procedures can be employed, and appropriate decisions made, about any governmental privileges that may apply. In that situation, the Counsel's Office will take appropriate steps, in consultation with the relevant investigating authorities, to ensure that any factual information communicated to the Counsel's Office in connection with the privilege determination is properly handled and not inappropriately shared with other EOP officers or employees (or their counsel).

How about 3:00 p.m. tomorrow, then? I don't know specifically what's on your mind, but if it relates to judicial selection, it may make sense to do it close to the WHJSC meeting anyway.

Would there be any way for us to move this back to 5:30? My wife has to go out tonight and is hoping I can get home by 7:00. If 5:30 doesn't work, no big deal, we'll keep it at 7:00. But if it's equally convenient, let me know, and maybe I can score a point with the boss.

From Detroit paper on Sunday:

"Michigan's two Senate seats are held by Democrats -- Carl Levin and Debbie Stabenow -- and they have a grudge to settle. Levin and Stabenow have written President George W. Bush asking that two hold-over appointments from the Clinton era get a hearing before new nominees are considered. Michigan Court of Appeals Judge Helene White and Detroit attorney
Kathleen McCree Lewis were nominated by Clinton, but never got a Senate hearing because of stonewalling by former Michigan Sen. Spencer Abraham. The senator felt Clinton reneged on a deal he'd made with Republicans for submitting nominees.

Paybacks are hell.

Traditionally, a judicial nominee doesn't get a hearing unless the home state senators return a "blue slip" indicating no objections. Levin says he'll be reluctant to return a blue slip for any new nominees until White and Lewis get a hearing.

So far, Republicans aren't crazy about giving up two Sixth Circuit seats in exchange for filling the other two with GOP-friendly judges. They hope with some deal-making they can capture all four seats.

But they know they must move fast and are busy compiling a list of names to send to the White House.

If they lose control of the Senate, the game is over.

Levin stops short of suggesting Democrats will sit on judicial appointments if they get a Senate majority.

But he notes that in the last Congress, only 15 of Clinton's 31 appeals

were confirmed; in the previous Congress, only 11 of 20 nominees were confirmed.
That compares with a two-thirds approval rate for the nominations of Presidents Reagan and Bush, and nearly 90 percent of President Carter's.

Meanwhile, the federal courts face a critical shortage of judges, with about 30 appeals court openings waiting to be filled.

It's the worst sort of partisan politics and exactly why American voters are weary of ideological differences interfering with the basic functions of government.
If Republicans and Democrats allow the judicial shortage to get much worse, they may find their political futures looking shorter than Thurmond's.

Brett -

As you know, the WH and the Office of Public Liaison in particular are interested in defining their role with regard to an organization now becoming known as ABE - Americans for Better Education.

ABE is being created as an independent organization dedicated to facilitating the passage of The President's No Child Left Behind education agenda. ABE would be housed, funded, and staffed as a group totally independent from the WH. It would:

Raise money
Lobby Congress
Conduct a media campaign
Work at the corporate and grassroots level to pass this agenda

With this in mind, what is the legal, and ethical role that the WH and any staffers can play with regard to ABE.

Can we:

Be present at ABE meetings (assuming they're off campus)?
Discuss the formation, organization, and mission of ABE?
Refer those interested in helping POTUS with his ed. plan to ABE and its offices/staff?
Actively recruit for ABE from among contacts we have made here at the WH?

We're at the point in the formation of this organization where many here feel that we have to be very careful. The answers to these questions will go a long way in helping us move forward.

Many thanks for your help, Brett.

You are great!!!! I have another question
We have been assigned the duty of bringing in some of Mrs. Bush's guests for the President's speech on Tuesday evening. We need to get them here and have been told that the RNC could pay for their travel expense. Is this true.
for example- we may invite some school teachers and tax relief families.
These are the people that the President refers to in the audience
during his speech

As to the former, we can say we won't share it now except in response to a judicial or congressional subpoena. It also will eventually be subject to potential disclosure under the Presidential Records Act, as you note. The e-mail address is the same analysis.

Note, moreover, that the rule in the post-12 year period is less absolute than you suggest; disclosure occurs only if disclosure otherwise would be authorized under FOIA (minus exemption 5). So the privacy exemption in FOIA may still protect some documents, particularly e-mail addresses (in the event anyone is concerned about disclosure of the address 15+ years from now). That is why I would use the "potential disclosure" language.

Prescott Caballero is looking for a sign-off on his web privacy policy as soon as possible. Basic questions are:
If someone sends an e-mail to the White House, can we say we won't share it. Seems to me the answer to that is No: it will be disclosed just like all other Presidential records 12 years following the end of the Administration.
The second question relates to e-mail addresses submitted through the website for purposes of receiving regular news updates from the WH. Is the e-mail address itself a record subject to the Act?

Agreed. Tim and I met yesterday with Jim Wilson, Chief Counsel of the Burton Committee, to discuss contingencies, and I think we are as clear as we can be for now. That is very good news that President Clinton plans not to assert privilege for those three pardons, however. That likely means that any areas of potential dispute involving our Office should be relatively minor.

The Wall Street Journal reports that the Clintons are preparing a limited waiver of executive privilege to allow Nolan, Lindsey, and Podesta to testify concerning the Vignali, Green, and Rich pardons only.

If the questioning goes beyond these pardons, privilege may be asserted, and we may be asked to take a position on behalf of President Bush on very short notice. It may make sense to put some procedures in place, either internally or in consultation with the committee staff, for dealing with such a contingency.

From Novak's column today:

Inside Report: Thurmond watch continues
WASHINGTON -- Sen. Strom Thurmond, the 98-year-old president pro tem of the Senate, no longer routinely presides at the Senate's daily convening. He performed the task one day recently to show he could still handle it, but ordered the pledge of allegiance prior to the chaplain's invocation that is supposed to come first. Democratic senators are no longer content with a death watch on the frail nonagenarian Republican, whose departure would mean Democratic control of the Senate for the first time since 1994. They tell reporters (not for attribution) that Thurmond is not capable of representing South Carolina's citizens and should resign.
Waiting for Thurmond to leave is a major reason why Democrats have dragged their feet in adopting this year's Senate committee budgets. The Feb. 28 deadline came and went, and a new target of Mar. 10 has been set.

Testimony of Mary Lee Warren
Deputy Assistant Attorney General, Criminal Division United States Department of Justice on March 6, 2001

Before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Committee on Governmental Affairs
United States Senate

Chairman Collins, Ranking Minority Senator Levin, members of the Subcommittee, I am pleased to appear before the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations to offer the Department of Justice's views regarding the use and abuse of correspondent banking relationships in the United States. I serve as Deputy Assistant Attorney General, overseeing money laundering and asset forfeiture issues for the Criminal Division. Prior to this position, I was Chief of the Narcotic and Dangerous Drug Section, and before that, I was an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the Southern District of New York for 11 years, prosecuting drugs, money laundering and other cases.

The Criminal Division has been pleased to provide the Subcommittee with information concerning U.S. law enforcement activities related to our anti-money laundering efforts and correspondent bank relationships, and to share our views and insights on the prosecutive and investigative obstacles and hindrances presented by correspondent bank accounts. Further, we look forward to continuing our cooperative efforts with the Subcommittee to work towards the best possible statutory and regulatory framework to support our anti-money laundering enforcement efforts.

Today, you have asked the Department of Justice to focus its remarks in three main areas identified in the Subcommittee's Report: (1) the extent to which money laundering through U.S. correspondent bank accounts is a significant law enforcement concern; (2) the legal and practical challenges in seizing putative illicit funds and identifying beneficial owners of and depositors into such accounts; and (3) our views on recommended amendments of forfeiture law related to correspondent bank accounts and other Subcommittee recommendations.

Subcommittee Report on Correspondent Banking

At the outset, the Department would like to commend the Subcommittee for its fine efforts in carefully researching and producing the report on correspondent banking. As the Subcommittee members and your staff know, money laundering is an increasingly international phenomenon, involving trillions of legitimate dollars masking hundreds of millions of dollars of illicit proceeds flowing through the same international and domestic clearinghouses every day.

Access to the U.S. financial system through dollar-currency clearinghouses is fundamental to the world's legitimate financial markets, and correspondent banking is an essential service that financial institutions provide to legitimate customers around the globe. Unfortunately, permitting legitimate account-holders to have access to these financial services also necessarily exposes the same financial system to access by international money launderers and other criminals. Your report has correctly identified and highlighted this significant vulnerability of our financial system that has been and continues to be exploited by money launderers and other financial criminals worldwide. Infiltration of the global financial markets by substantial sums of illicit proceeds erodes the integrity of the entire system, as well as erodes the tax base of the affected countries. The Subcommittee's report on correspondent banking, as well as the previous one on private banking, make clear that without the proper monitoring and supervision, the legitimate and necessary financial mechanisms can and undoubtedly will become corrupted.

Impact of Correspondent Banking on Law Enforcement

The international movement of illicit proceeds through correspondent bank accounts servicing foreign institutions is often difficult to detect. Further, even when detected, law enforcement may encounter significant hurdles in tracing, seizing, and forfeiting such funds.

Typically, correspondent bank accounts are used in the "layering" or "integration" stages of money laundering, in which the criminal financiers attempt to mask the origin and nature of the underlying funds, after the proceeds have already been

"placed" into the financial system. Determining the true beneficial owner of funds being transferred through a correspondent account can be a very difficult challenge for investigators in these second and third stages of money laundering.

Again and again, law enforcement investigations - despite best efforts by dedicated professionals - continue to be frustrated by the movements of criminally-derived funds into and through certain jurisdictions where our ability to identify the true beneficial owner is impaired or prevented. Most often, this frustration occurs, as noted in your report, when U.S. financial institutions offer banking relations to foreign "shell" banks, "offshore" banks, and other banks located in countries that provide unduly broad bank secrecy protections for customers and that have little or no effective anti-money laundering or forfeiture laws or regulations.

In addition, in many cases, a foreign bank may claim ownership of the entire amount in a correspondent account, thus protecting and shielding the actual identity of the underlying owner of the funds and allowing the owner to be shielded by the facade of the bank. Some foreign governments also impose legal restrictions and obstacles making it more difficult - if not impossible - to determine the true identity of the owner of the funds. In short, overly broad bank secrecy, ineffective licensing and regulatory oversight, and lack of effective anti-money laundering controls combine to make such cases a sometimes insurmountable challenge to financial crime investigators and regulators.

In foreign jurisdictions where "shell" banks or "offshore" banks operate with impunity, banks must be required to keep and maintain proper account and transaction records - particularly, as they relate to the true beneficial owners of funds or property - as banks are required to do in the U.S. It is important to keep such records to protect the bank against any liabilities assumed from questionable customers and to facilitate responses to the legitimate inquiries of effective law enforcement. The U.S. Government regularly works with a number of foreign governments to help establish anti-money laundering controls over their financial institutions.

Understanding that there are locations where foreign banks are not required to maintain banking records, U.S. institutions must then take all reasonable steps to ensure the bona fides of the foreign bank account-holder. U.S. institutions must understand the scope and rigor, if any, of the anti-money laundering and forfeiture regime under which the foreign institution operates - as well as the risks and consequences resulting from doing business with such entities. In addition, U.S. institutions should monitor their correspondent banking relationships on an ongoing basis, including the transaction activity and the legitimacy of the underlying account-holder(s).

Further, law enforcement must be permitted to pierce bank secrecy laws, where appropriate, in order to obtain important financial records.

In sum, the U.S. financial institutions must be vigilant and the U.S. Government must ensure that our laws provide the necessary tools to prosecute individuals who knowingly facilitate the transfer of illicit funds through correspondent bank accounts, and to identify, seize, freeze, and forfeit criminal proceeds transacted through such accounts.

Successes in the Fight Against International Money Laundering

In the context of to the Subcommittee's focus today on correspondent bank accounts and their potential threat to the integrity of the international financial system and legitimate needs of law enforcement, I would be remiss if I did not outline the general facts of a few major successes at the Departments of Justice and the Treasury in our coordinated fight against international financial crime. As the Subcommittee is aware, the two Departments have worked hard together and scored important recent successes in the fight against money laundering.

"Operation Skymaster" was a highly successful undercover operation attacking money laundering that was taking place through the Black Market Peso Exchange (BMPE). From March 1997 through May 1999, Operation Skymaster undercover agents and informants managed to gain the trust of Colombian peso brokers working for Colombian narcotics traffickers. The BMPE system relies on peso brokers in Colombia who convert drug dollars collected and held in the United States into pesos for the Colombian drug suppliers in Colombia through the use of U.S. consumer goods imported into Colombia for Colombian businesses and paid for in U.S. drug dollars.

In this case, the peso brokers directed the undercover agents to pick up the proceeds from drug sales at particular locations and at particular times. The undercover agents then deposited the drug cash into government-controlled bank accounts and wire transferred such funds to bank accounts designated by the peso brokers. Using the Colombian BMPE system, the peso brokers, in turn, wire transferred the dollars to U.S. exporters as payment for goods received by the Colombian importers. Continuing the laundering cycle, the importers received confirmation that the wire transfers were sent and paid the peso brokers the equivalent amount in pesos in Colombia. Thereafter, the peso brokers delivered the pesos to the Colombian drug trafficking groups to complete the cycle.

Operation Skymaster combined the strengths of the U.S. Customs Service, U.S. Attorney's Office in Mobile, Alabama, and Department of Justice's Criminal Division, and has already resulted in 12 convictions on money laundering and drug conspiracy charges.

Similarly, in December 1999, five defendants were indicted in Atlanta, as part of the Organized Crime Drug Enforcement Task Force (OCDETF) anti-money laundering investigation entitled "Operation Juno," which involved a multi-million dollar money laundering scheme. Undercover agents participating in Operation Juno picked up drug proceeds at the direction of the money launderers usually ranging between $100,000 and $500,000 in U.S. currency in Dallas, Houston, New York, Newark, Providence, and Chicago, as well as Madrid and Rome. These funds were subsequently wire-transferred from the originating (collection) city to an undercover bank account in Atlanta and then distributed to various accounts in the U.S. and around the world. As in Operation Skymaster, the drug proceeds in Operation Juno were laundered through the Colombian Black Market Peso Exchange, as peso brokers "exchanged" the dollars on deposit in the undercover bank accounts for Colombian pesos obtained from Colombian importers of U.S. goods. Operation Juno combined the investigative and prosecutive efforts of the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA), Internal Revenue Service-Criminal Investigation Division (IRS-CID) and U.S. Attorney's Office in Atlanta.

While these cases provide examples of successful investigations in terms of indictments, convictions, and forfeiture of assets, they also have revealed and highlighted some problems facing law enforcement in tracing and forfeiting criminal proceeds in foreign countries. Our money laundering laws, first enacted in 1986 to address a primarily domestic problem, have not kept pace with the developments in technology and international commerce since that time. The forfeiture cases spawned by Operations Skymaster and Juno investigations underscore the difficulties in forfeiting illegal proceeds transferred through correspondent bank accounts.

The problems encountered fall into three categories. First, due to the existence of offshore banks with representative offices in other foreign countries, it is difficult for U.S. law enforcement to determine the actual location of the funds and in which jurisdiction we should focus our forfeiture efforts. Even where U.S. law enforcement requests the assistance of the correct foreign jurisdiction, our ability to forfeit these funds depends upon the strength of the forfeiture laws in that jurisdiction, which, if available, are frequently incompatible with ours, and upon the cooperation of the foreign government.

The second category of problems arises from the limitations of domestic U.S. forfeiture law that can open to complex, time-consuming legal issues with respect to jurisdiction and venue for the forfeiture case. This is particularly true in cases when U.S. law enforcement does not know initially the final destination or beneficiary of the funds sent through a correspondent account and only determines this fact at a later point in time.

Finally, these problems are exacerbated by the statutory limitations that require the Government to bring forfeiture actions against "fungible property" - such as funds in a bank account - within one year from the date of a money laundering offense (Title 18 U.S.C. Section 984(b)). If the Government does not file its forfeiture action within that time, the Government is required to meet strict tracing requirements that can rarely be satisfied in cases involving correspondent bank accounts. Depending upon who claims a property interest in the funds seized from correspondent bank accounts, the Government may be required to prove that the respondent-bank itself was involved in the money laundering offense (18 U.S.C. Section 984(c)(1)) - often, a very difficult, if not impossible, task.

Problems presented by correspondent bank accounts in forfeiture cases have arisen not only in Operations Skymaster and Juno, but in other cases as well. For example, in Operation Casablanca, a money laundering prosecution based in Los Angeles involving foreign banks and their correspondent accounts, Criminal Division prosecutors in Washington, D.C. filed civil forfeiture complaints in the District of Columbia against the funds wire transferred to foreign accounts, pursuant to the authority granted in Title 18, U.S. Code, Sections 981(a) and 984, and Title 28 U.S. Code, Section 1355(b). Our efforts to have these funds frozen and forfeited met with a variety of results, depending upon the jurisdiction to which they were transmitted. In some cases, we received cooperation from our foreign counterparts and in others, we did not. In some cases where there was cooperation, challenges and questions were raised as to the appropriate venue and jurisdiction for the action, as well as to the actual location of the funds.

In Operation Casablanca, funds had been wire transferred to a bank account in a foreign location. After filing a civil forfeiture complaint, the Department requested assistance from the foreign government in freezing these funds, pursuant to the 1988 U.N. Vienna Convention. As a result, our foreign counterparts interviewed employees of the bank and determined that the bank, as well as the account to which the funds had been transferred, were actually located in another jurisdiction.

Pursuant to a mutual legal assistance treaty with the second country, the Department advised authorities that we had information concerning the transfer of drug proceeds to bank accounts within its jurisdiction. Because the laws of this second country only recognized criminal forfeiture and did not allow for assistance to the United States in a civil forfeiture action, the government of the second country opened its own investigation based on the information we provided, and subsequently froze the accounts. However, because the defendants were not then before that court, it was unclear whether the funds could be forfeited criminally. In addition, the bank did not appear to have any actual buildings or branches within the court's jurisdiction, and the assets securing the bank's obligations were not located in the country. Finally, having come almost full circle, it was determined that the assets we were pursuing were likely located in the foreign bank's correspondent account in a U.S. bank in New York City.

Indeed, there remains a great deal of uncertainty today as to the prospects for success in the U.S. civil forfeiture action, because there is a potential claim that the assets in question were actually "located" in the foreign bank's correspondent account in New York. This fact draws into question whether the District of Columbia is the appropriate jurisdiction for purposes of the underlying civil forfeiture action. Unfortunately, however, the Government is now precluded from filing a complaint in New York because of the one-year limitation under Section 984, discussed previously.

This scenario is one of many examples which illustrates the difficulties we face in tracing, seizing, and forfeiting assets held in correspondent accounts of foreign banks. One should further note that the above example described a situation where the foreign governments were cooperative with the U.S. requests. In many cases, such cooperation cannot be obtained, and the difficulties are further exacerbated if we are dealing with a non-cooperative bank secrecy jurisdiction.

Report Recommendations

Having described these cases, I would now like to shift my remarks to some of the recommendations in the Subcommittee's report and other suggested solutions. The Minority Staff Report includes six Recommendations "to reduce the use of U.S. correspondent banks for money laundering [purposes]." We believe that the first four of these Recommendations are primarily regulatory in nature and therefore best addressed by the bank regulators and supervisors. The final two Recommendations, however, deal with law enforcement issues; they suggest that: (1) the U.S. Government "should offer improved assistance to U.S. banks in identifying and evaluating high[-]risk foreign banks," and (2) "forfeiture protections [provisions] in U.S. law [should] be amended" to enhance our ability to seize and forfeit illicit funds flowing through correspondent bank accounts. These are valuable Recommendations, and we concur that they warrant further study and review. We would be pleased to work with the Subcommittee members and staff in revising forfeiture legislation to accomplish these worthy goals.

With respect to the part of the Recommendation relating to improving communication channels between the U.S. Government and U.S. banks, it is important to note that U.S. law enforcement currently participates with banks and other representatives from the financial community in an effort to disseminate anti-money laundering and financial crime-related information. The Departments of Justice and the Treasury are actively engaged with bank regulators and the banking community. For example, the Department participates in: (1) the Bank Secrecy Act Advisory Group with representatives from the banking and securities industry and money service businesses; (2) the Suspicious Activities Review group that recently produced the "SAR Activity Review," a series of anti-money laundering publications; and (3) outreach groups concerning the operation of the Black Market Peso Exchange system.

As to the portion of the Recommendation regarding advising banks of specific high-risk activities, the Departments of Justice, the Treasury, and State have been active participants in the Financial Action Task Force's (FATF's) initiative on "Non-Cooperative Countries and Territories." In an effort to encourage other countries to strengthen their anti-money laundering regime, the Department of Justice's Criminal Division works multilaterally to bolster coordinated worldwide enforcement efforts against financial crimes. This program endeavors to identify publicly the locations of the most prevalent money laundering activities in the world and the jurisdictions with the weakest anti-money laundering legal and regulatory framework. Indeed the FATF has identified 15 jurisdictions recently-named by the FATF as being "noncooperative" in money laundering matters. As well, the Department worked well with the Treasury Department and other federal regulators on FinCEN Advisory warnings explaining the shortcomings relating to these 15 jurisdictions.

This multilateral effort has proven to be successful in focusing the world's attention on countries that do not have adequate standards in anti-money laundering enforcement and inspiring named countries to address their shortcomings in this area. The Criminal Division also works extensively to provide assistance to countries that seek to improve their money laundering and asset forfeiture laws and enhance their enforcement programs.

While many jurisdictions do not have the proper anti-money laundering statutes and regulations in place, the U.S. Government, on its own, cannot compel the necessary changes. We need the cooperation of our foreign counterparts to disrupt the flow of criminal proceeds around the globe and deprive criminal organizations of their ill-gotten gains. We must continue to work, in concert, with our international partners to break down the obstacles and barriers that insulate, protect, and disguise the ill-gotten gains from detection in those jurisdictions where adequate anti-money laundering controls are lacking.

With respect to the last Recommendation amending our asset forfeiture laws as you suggest, we believe that such a provision would be beneficial in terms of pursuing and prosecuting forfeiture cases. A provision of this kind would eliminate the need to depend upon the enactment of foreign forfeiture law and the willingness of foreign authorities to cooperate. In addition, such a provision would disrupt criminals' attempting to shield their ill-gotten gains behind bank secrecy laws of uncooperative jurisdictions. We strongly believe, as mentioned previously, that illicit proceeds - wherever located in the world - should not be hidden from detection or immune from prosecution based upon weak anti-money laundering enforcement. There should be "no safe haven" for money that is the proceeds of crime.

Conclusion

Once again, I commend the Subcommittee and your staff for focusing attention on this important issue and preparing this report. We look forward to working with you on solutions to the problems highlighted in your report. I will be happy to respond to any questions you might have.

I think some veterans believe that the campaign for the Mall site is just a PR stunt, that the proposed monument and its location is unattractive and ill-suited to those it is supposedly honoring, and that the views of the serviceman were not properly considered in making the decision. There is actually an organized group called World War II Veterans to Save the Mall. Rather than my restating the vets' motivations, I will simply quote here its stated purpose:

"World War II Veterans to Save the Mall formed in Spring 2000 to represent a voice for the millions of citizen soldiers who actually prosecuted that war and who oppose the location of the proposed World War II Memorial at the Rainbow Pool site on the National Mall. The World War II Veterans to Save the Mall does not want the destruction of the National Mall to be its legacy.

"The historic Rainbow Pool on the National Mall is the wrong site for the
```

World War II Memorial. And the pending proposal for the WWII Memorial unnecessarily will damage the Mall, the symbol of what our generation fought and died to preserve.
The proposed plan fails to live up to the promise made by Congress for a memorial and museum that will remind future generations about the civilian and military achievements during the 1940s.
The misleading massive fund raising campaign by the memorial's sponsors fails to tell the truth about the WWII Memorial. Veterans have been kept in the dark. Would they accept it if they knew about the design?"

Help me out here: What is the argument that the WWII memorial should not be built on the Mall? Is in merely the "don't crown the Mall" argument, or is something more at stake here?

My point is not for opposing the memorial. My recommendation is to not take a position on the location of the Memorial. While I think everyone is in favor of honoring WWII vets (no one more than me, since my father is among that distinguished class), vets opposed to the location on the Mall may equal those in favor of that location. Therefore, we may serve our client well by not getting embroiled in the debate over whether the memorial should be on or off the Mall.

As Rachel notes, Bob Dole leads the commission that supports the memorial. Notwithstanding his recent commercials, Bob Dole is an American hero, and memorials to veterans sure seem like a good patriotic idea. I thus guess I would be surprised if President Bush wanted to oppose Bob Dole on an apple-pie issue like this. (Not that we will be in the loop, but my 2 cents.)

Following up on Addington's caution about White House involvement on the WWII Memorial, I want to add that, perhaps contrary to what you may think, many WWII veterans are opposed to having the Memorial on the Mall. Further reason to tread lightly.

I think dividing by state makes sense, and I think we should consider which circuit seats we handled in deciding which states' district court seats to handle. I think this is especially important where one of us has developed a relationship with a Senate staff.

The advantage of this approach is that it allows us each to develop some expertise with respect to the states for which we're responsible and to achieve some efficiencies going forward. The disadvantage is that it doesn't allow us to tailor individual workloads depending upon what else is going on in the office. I could go either way -- dividing up states from the start or dividing up vacancies as we go -- but I'd be interested to know what others think.

Subject: District Court Seats -- Our Role

I propose that the 8 of us soon divvy up -- by state -- the large number of district court vacancies. That way, someone in this Office can be responsible for coordinating with the Senate and DOJ on each district court vacancy. As I foresee it (and I know Brad feels even more strongly about this), we'll have a far less substantial role on district court nominees. Nonetheless, the Judge wants us involved, and it thus probably makes the most sense to divide up the states among the 8 of us so that there is a White House Counsel point person for each state's district court seats.

Thoughts?

I don't understand the question. I also don't understand why the U.S. Attorney's office would be interested in this. And which U.S. Attorneys office are we talking about? I do know that Rachel Brand raised an issue in the staff meeting this morning relating to this Commission, so perhaps you may want to have her return whatever call it was you received. Let me know.

Subject: Biden/Leahy Conservative Judicial Activism Speeches

Rachel:

As per our conversation, Senators Biden and Leahy gave the attached speeches on the Senate floor last year. In short, they attacked the "Imperial Rehnquist Court" for its "conservative judicial activism." They contend that we conservatives are hypocrites for criticizing liberal judges for striking down statutes, but applauding the Rehnquist Court for striking down statutes.

[In my view, "activism" is not the striking down or upholding of a statute or executive action, it is the issuance of a judgment based on the judge's own contemporary notions of justice instead of the text and original intent of the Constitution.]

Senator Biden indicated that he would be making more speeches on this subject in the future, and Senator Leahy has indicated that he might call a hearing on this issue this year. Accordingly, I would welcome the help of our best and brightest at Office of White House Counsel in drafting response speeches for Senator Sessions and other Republicans to use against the coming attack in Committee and on the floor. No exact time frame yet, but Senators
Biden and Leahy could begin at any time.

Thanks,
Ed

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the Senate will soon be considering the Treasury and general government appropriations bill. This is one of the important funding bills we will have to pass this year to keep the Government open and running. In addition to the Department of the Treasury, this is the bill that provides moneys for the operation of the White House, the Executive Office of the President, and it also provides funds for the construction of new courthouses, reflecting the priorities of the administrative offices of the courts. It is this third branch of our Government that I will take a few minutes to talk about. In 1994, the Senate and the House passed the Violence Against Women Act which President Clinton then signed into law. As the author of that legislation, securing its passage had been my highest priority for three sessions of Congress. The cause of eliminating violence against women remains my highest priority. I have watched the progress of the implementation of my Violence Against Women Act. In that act we included a provision giving anyone who had been the victim of a crime of violence motivated by gender the right to bring a lawsuit seeking damages from the assailant. On May 15 of this year, in a case called United States v. Morrison, the Supreme Court struck down this provision. The Court said that addressing the problems of violence against women in this way was beyond the constitutional authority of the elected representatives of the United States. Flat out, they said it was an unconstitutional act we engaged in. In ruling it was beyond the constitutional authority of the Congress, the Court said that it does not matter how great an effect such acts of violence have on interstate commerce. They said gender-based violence could be crippling large segments of our national economy, but, nonetheless, even if that were proven--according to the Court--the Congress is powerless to enact a law to deter such active violence because although we have acted this way under the commerce clause of the Constitution before, the Court ruled violence in and of itself is not commerce.

I believe this is a constitutionally wrong decision. It is true that it does not strike a fatal blow against the struggle to end violence against women in this country. The other parts of the Violence Against Women Act are unaffected by this decision. I am pleased to report that these other provisions, together with changing attitudes in this country, are beginning to make a difference in this struggle in the lives of women who have been victimized. I have introduced a bill with, now, I think over 60 cosponsors, to enhance the provisions of my Violence Against Women Act so that we can continue to make progress.

Nonetheless, the decision in Morrison is a wrongheaded decision. It is not just an isolated error. No, it is part of a growing body of decisions in which this Supreme Court is seizing the power to make important social decisions that, under our constitutional system of government, are properly made by elected representatives who answer to the people, unlike the Court. I said at the time that the case came down, striking down the provisions of the Violence Against Women Act, that the decision does more damage to our constitutional jurisprudence than it does to the fight against gender-based violence. Since I said that, a number of people have asked me to explain what I mean by that. Today, since we have the time, I am beginning a series of speeches to do just that by placing the Morrison decision in a larger context of what an increasingly out-of-touch Supreme Court has been doing in recent years. I plan on making two additional speeches on this subject over the next several weeks and months. It is crucial, in my view, that the American people understand the larger pattern of the Supreme Court's recent decisions and, to me, the disturbing direction in which the Supreme Court is moving because the consequences of these cases may well impact upon the ability of American citizens to ask their elected representatives in Congress to help them solve national problems that have national impact.

Many of the Court's decisions are written in the name of protecting prerogatives of the State governments and speak in the time honored language of federalism and States rights. But as my grandmother would say, they have stood federalism on its head. Make no mistake, what is at issue here is the question of power, who wants it, who has it, and who controls it--basically, whether power will be exercised by an insulated judiciary or by the elected representatives of the people. In our separation of powers doctrine, upon which our Government rests, that power is being wrestled by the Court from the elected representatives, for in every case in which the Court has struck down a Federal statute, it has invalidated a statute that the people of the United States have wanted. As a matter of fact, in many of the cases of statutes that have been struck down, the numerous attorneys general of the various States have sided with the Federal Government in briefs filed with the Court, saying that they supported the decision taken by the Congress and the President.

Let's give the emerging pattern of Supreme Court decisions a name. In a speech I gave before the New Hampshire Supreme Court last year, I referred to this pattern as an emerging pattern of an imperial judiciary. I meant to describe the judiciary that is making decisions and seizing power in areas in which the judgment of elected branches of government ought to be the controlling judgment, not the Court's. With increasing frequency, the Supreme Court is taking over the role of government for itself. The imperial judging might also be called a kind of judicial activism. `Judicial activism' is an overworked expression, one that has often been used by conservatives to criticize liberal judges. Under this Supreme Court, however, the shoe is plainly on the other foot. It is now conservative judges who are supplanting the judgment of the people's representatives and substituting their own for that of the Congress and the President.

This is not just Joe Biden talking. The Violence Against Women Act case came to the Supreme Court through the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, where Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson is the chief judge. Judge Wilkinson has been on many so-called short lists for possible Supreme Court nominees of Governor Bush and is a well recognized conservative. In the opinion he wrote, agreeing that the civil rights remedy in the Violence Against Women Act was unconstitutional, Judge Wilkinson praised the result as an example of `this century's third and final era of judicial activism.' He, Judge Wilkinson, acknowledges that the decision represents the `third and,' he says, `final era of judicial activism.' And he said he hoped this new activism would be enduring presence in our Federal courts. That was in Brzonkala v. VPI, 169 F.3d 820, 892-893. Or consider Judge Douglas Ginsburg of the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, another well recognized conservative. Judge Ginsburg has quite explicitly criticized the interpretation of the Constitution that has prevailed through the better part of this entire century and, indeed, throughout most of our country's history, an interpretation which correctly recognizes the broad capacity and competence of the people to govern themselves through their elected officials, not through the court system. According to Judge Ginsburg, the correct interpretation of the Constitution produces results that severely restrict the power of elected government. He calls the Constitution `the Constitution in Exile.' Under that Constitution, the one that he thinks controls, unelected Federal judges would wield enormous power to second-guess legislative bodies on both the State and the Federal levels.

When Judge Ginsburg wrote about these ideas in a magazine article in 1995, he was eagerly awaiting signs that the Supreme Court would begin to embrace his notion of a Constitution in exile. Five short years later, much has changed. As Linda Greenhouse recently put it in a New York Times column, Judge Ginsburg's hopes sound decidedly less out of context today than they did even 5 years ago, just before the court began issuing a series of decisions reviving a limited vision of federal power. By taking a closer look at these series of decisions referred to in the New York Times, the pattern I have been referring to will become quite evident.

The first clear step toward an imperial judiciary was taken in the case called Lopez v. United States, which invalidated a Federal law making it a crime to possess a gun in a school zone. The Supreme Court held that it was not obvious `to the naked eye' that the nationwide problem of school violence has a substantial effect on the national economy and interstate commerce, the predicate we have to show to have jurisdiction under the commerce clause to pass such a law. In our desire to respond quickly to the epidemic of school violence, which we all talk about here on the floor, we in the Congress did not make findings--that is, we did not have hearings that said `we find that the following actions have the following impact on commerce'--we did not make findings to relate school violence to interstate commerce.

Subsequently, however, we did make such findings and pointed to the voluminous evidence that was before the Congress at the time we passed Senator Kohl's Gun-Free School Zone Act. Nonetheless, the Court, this new imperial judiciary, ignored our findings and the raft of supporting evidence, and drew its own conclusions. They concluded--the Court concluded--that the threat of school violence to national commerce is not substantial enough to justify a legislative response on the part of those of us elected to the Congress.

The Lopez case startled many people. Numerous law schools sponsored conferences to discuss the meaning of this case. Constitutional scholars debated how great a departure this case signaled from the settled approach to congressional power that has been taken over the 20th century, at least the last two-thirds of the 20th century, by all previous Supreme Courts. Immediately after the decision, no consensus emerged. Many scholars plausibly concluded that Lopez was, as one put it, just an `island in the stream,' a decision that breaks the flow of the river of cases before it, but which will have no lasting effect of any significance on those that follow it.

How wrong he was. It now turns out that if Lopez is an island, it is one the size of Australia. The Court soon followed Lopez by striking down the Religious Freedom and Restoration Act that Senator Hatch and I had worked so hard to craft and the Senate and House passed and the President signed. In Boerne v. Flores--that is the name of the case that struck down the Religious Freedom Act we passed--the Congress of the United States enacted the Religious Freedom Act in response to an earlier Supreme Court decision. In 1990, the Court ruled in Employment Decision v. Smith that the constitutional freedom of religion is not offended by a State law that significantly burdens the ability of members of that religion to practice their religion, so long as that law applies across the board, without singling out religious practices of any one denomination in any way.

For example, under the Smith decision, a dry county which prohibits the consumption of all alcohol could prohibit a church from using sacramental wine when they give communion, as they do in my church; I am a Roman Catholic; and they do so in other churches as well. Smith broke with the prior line of decisions holding that such laws needed to make reasonable accommodations for religion unless the Government had a very good reason for applying the law when it offended someone's sincere religious practices to do so. In other words, unless the Government had an overwhelming reason why in a Catholic Church they could not serve, when they give communion, a sip of wine with the host, prior decisions said you cannot pass a law to stop that.

The overwhelming majority of both Houses of Congress thought the Smith decision was incorrect as a matter of constitutional interpretation and as a matter of policy. We concluded that because section 5 of the 14th amendment authorized the Congress to protect fundamental civil liberties by appropriate legislation, we could enact a statute providing greater protection than the Smith decision did to accepted religious practices. After extensive hearings under the leadership of Senator Hatch and Senator Kennedy, the so-called RFRA, Religious Freedom and Restoration Act, was drafted to require that the application of neutral laws had to make reasonable accommodation to bona fide religious objections.

The Supreme Court struck down our effort to extend reasonable protections to religious practices. It held that the 14th amendment does not authorize the Congress to confer civil rights by statute or to give judicially recognized rights a greater scope than the Court has set forth. In the Court's view, the power of section 5 of the 14th amendment gives the Congress the power to `enforce' the rights established in that amendment, but it only amounts to a power to provide remedies for the violations of the rights that the Court has recognized--not the Congress, the Court has recognized--not to protect any broader conception of civil rights than the Court has already recognized.

In the Flores case, it was another sign that we are on the road to judicial imperialism. Recognizing the implications of the decision, the Republican majority on the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on the Constitution in the House held a hearing on the Court's refusal to defer to Congress' factual findings and the policy determinations it based on those findings.

Judicial deference to congressional findings and congressional authority to enforce civil rights are obviously important questions standing alone, but the Supreme Court raised the stakes even higher in two decisions relating to what we call State sovereign immunity. In those cases, Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida and Alden v. Maine, the Court declared the Congress may not use its commerce clause powers to abrogate State sovereign immunity.

What this means, translated, is that when Congress acts under its broad power to improve the national economy, a power granted to it by the Constitution, the Congress, in the Court's view, cannot authorize an individual to sue a State even if they are suing over a purely commercial transaction with that State. For example, as the Court held in the Alden case, an employee of a State now cannot sue his or her employer for failing to comply with the Fair Labor Standards Act just because the employer happens to be a State. If it is a business person, a corporation, and they violate the Fair Labor Standards Act, which we passed to protect all people who work, they can be held accountable under that act. The Supreme Court came along and said: But, Congress, you can't pass a law that holds a State accountable.

The Seminole Tribe and Alden cases highlight the importance of the issue of congressional power under the 14th amendment because the Court continues to recognize that Congress can authorize individuals to sue States if our legislation is authorized by the 14th amendment rather than by the commerce clause. By limiting Congress' 14th amendment powers, therefore, the Boerne decision, which is the Religious Freedom Act decision, draws into question our capacity to meaningfully protect civil rights at all whenever remedies directly against a State are being considered.

Viewed in its historical context, this is a remarkable development in and of itself. The text of the 14th amendment was drafted immediately after the Civil War, and it grants powers to only one branch of the Government, the only one named in the amendment: the Congress, not the Court. Specifically, the amendment sought to grant the Congress ample power to enforce civil rights against the States.

That is what the Civil War was about. That is why the Civil War amendments were passed: to put it in stone. Developments in these recent cases I have cited are in profound tension with the sentiments and concerns of the drafters of the 14th amendment. Still, after that case, some might continue to say it is not clear where the Court was really headed. It was possible to say in the Flores case that it was simply articulating the standard governing the nature of Congress' power; namely, that it was purely remedial and not substantive. Because the legislative record was designed to support an exercise of substantive power, that record did not so clearly support the exercise of the remedial power.

On this reading, the Court did not second-guess the congressional findings. It just saw them as answering the wrong question. Subsequent events, however, have confirmed that the Subcommittee on the Constitution had a right to be worried about Boerne because Boerne was much more ominous than that.

In one of the last cases decided in the 1998 term, the Court laid down yet another marker, perhaps the most bold decision yet in the trend of the Court usurping democratic authority. In that decision, the Court held unconstitutional a Federal statute, the Patent and Plant Variety Protection Remedy Clarification Act. That act provided a remedy for patent holders against any State that infringes on the patent holder's patent. That was in Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Board v. College Savings Bank. Before enacting this remedial legislation, the Congress had developed a specific legislative record detailing specific cases where States had infringed a federally conferred patent and evidence suggested the possibility of a future increase in the frequency of State infringements of patents held by individuals. Unlike Lopez, the Patent Protection Act did not lack findings or legislative record. Unlike Boerne, the legislative record demonstrated that the statute was remedial and not substantive. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court decided, independently, that the facts before the Congress, as it, the Court, interpreted them, provided, in the Court's words, `little support' for the need for a remedy.

Get this: We, up here, concluded, on the record, that States have, in fact, infringed upon the patents held by individuals. We laid out why we thought--Democrat and Republican, House, Senate, and President--we should protect individuals from that and why we thought the problem would get worse. We set that out in the record when we passed the legislation. But the Supreme Court comes along and says: We don't think there is a problem. Who are they to determine whether or not there is a problem? It is theirs to determine whether our action is constitutional, not whether or not there is a problem. But they said they found little support for our concern--the concern of 535 elected Members of the Congress and the President of the United States. The Court was not substituting a constitutional principle here. The Court was substituting its own policy views for those of this body that described the problem of State infringement on Federal patents as being of national import. They concluded it is not that big of a deal.

We need to be clear about what the Court did in the patent remedy case. For a long time, it has been accepted constitutional law that once a piece of legislation has been found to be designed to cover a subject over which the Constitution gives the Congress the power to act--let me say that again--this has been accepted constitutional theory and law that once a piece of legislation has been found to be designed by the Congress to cover a subject over which the Congress has constitutional authority, that it then becomes wholly within the sphere of Congress to decide whether any particular action is wise or is prudent.

This has been constitutional law going all the way back as far as M'Culloch v. Maryland, written by the then-Chief Justice John Marshall, in 1819. There Chief Justice Marshall wrote that the `government which has the right to act, and has imposed on it the duty of performing that act, must, according to the dictates of reason, be allowed to select the means [by which to act].' In the patent remedy case, the Court quite clearly usurped the constitutional authority of Congress to select the means it thinks appropriate to remedy a problem that is admittedly within the authority of Congress to address. In the patent remedy case, the Court did not hold that Congress has exercised a power in an area outside its constitutional authority. Instead, it disagreed with our substantive judgment as to whether the Federal remedy was warranted. In short, the Court struck down the remedy just because it did not think the remedy was a good idea. Who are they to make that judgment? Talk about judicial activism. The cases I have reviewed today--Lopez, Boerne , Seminole Tribe, Alden, and Florida Prepaid--bring us up to this term just completed by the Supreme Court.

In the next series of speeches, I will show how the trend of judicial imperialism continued, and was extended by several cases decided this past year, including the Violence Against Women Act, which I began with today. The bottom line here is, in the opinion of many scholars and observers of the Court, we are witnessing the emergence of what I referred to a year ago as the `imperial judiciary.'

I just discussed five cases leading up to the just completed term. Now I would like to discuss two significant decisions of this term. I will also begin the task of trying to place these decisions in a broader framework of the Constitution's allocation of responsibility between the elected branches of Government and the judiciary. It is a framework that this `imperial judiciary' is disregarding.

Last December, the Court focused its sight on the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. That is the act that protects Americans against discrimination based on age and is amply justified under our Constitution. Not only does it protect the basic civil rights of equal protection and nondiscriminatory treatment--with bipartisan support, I might add--it also promotes the national economy, by ensuring that the labor pool is not artificially limited by mandatory requirements to retire. So the Congress had ample constitutional authority to enact the Age Discrimination Act. And the Court did not deny that. Nonetheless, the Court, this last term, gutted the enforcement of the act as the act applied to all State government employees.

Building on its earlier decisions in the Seminole Tribe and Alden cases, which I discussed a moment ago, the Court ruled that the Constitution prevents us from authorizing State employees to sue their employers for violation of the Federal Age Discrimination Act. The Court also said, however, that the Constitution does not prevent the Congress from applying the law to the States. Now, you have to listen to this carefully. In a thoroughly bizarre manner, in my view, the Supreme Court has now held that the Constitution allows the Age Discrimination Act to apply to State employers, but it denies the employees the right to sue the State employers when their rights under the Federal law are violated.

We learned in law school that a right without a remedy can hardly be called a right. As a result of this case, called Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, over 27,000 State employees in my State of Delaware are left without an effective judicial remedy for a violation of a Federal law that protects them against age discrimination. Across the Nation, nearly 5 million State employees no longer have the full protection of Federal law. Recall that in the Boerne decision--the case that invalidated the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, which I discussed a moment ago--the Court had begun the process of undermining the ability of the Congress under section 5 of the 14th amendment to enact legislation protecting civil rights.

In Kimel, they continued that process. In Kimel, the Court held that Congress' 14th amendment power to enforce civil rights refers only to the enforcement of those rights that the Court itself has declared and not to rights that exist by virtue of valid statutes. Because the Court decided that the Age Discrimination Act goes beyond the general protection the Constitution provides when it says that all citizens are entitled to `equal protection under the law,' the Court ruled that the right to sue an employer for violations of the act was not `appropriate' and so ruled the act unconstitutional. After Kimel, the pattern of the imperial judiciary now emerges with some clarity.

First, the Court has repudiated over 175 years of nearly unanimous agreement that Congress, not the Court, will decide what constitutes `necessary and proper' legislation under any of its, Congress', enumerated powers. Then in a parallel maneuver, the Court has announced that it, not the Congress, will decide what constitutes `appropriate' remedial legislation to enforce civil rights and civil liberties.

Let me return for a moment to the Violence Against Women Act, which I began earlier in my speech. Prior to the enactment of the Violence Against Women Act, I held extensive hearings in the Judiciary Committee when I was chairman, compiling voluminous evidence on the pattern of violence against women in America.

The massive legislative record Congress generated over a 4-year period of those hearings supported Congress' explicit findings that gender-motivated violence does substantially and directly affect interstate commerce. How? By preventing a discrete group of Americans, i.e., women, from participating fully in the day-to-day commerce of this country. These are the types of findings, I might add, that were absent when the Congress first enacted the Gun-Free School Zone Act, struck down in the Lopez case. Let me remind you that Congress, when we enacted the civil rights provision invalidated in Morrison, found [C]rimes of violence motivated by gender have a substantial adverse impact upon interstate commerce by deterring potential victims of violence from traveling interstate, from engaging in employment in interstate business, from transacting with businesses and in places involved in interstate commerce. Crimes of violence motivated by gender have a substantial adverse effect on interstate commerce by diminishing national productivity, increasing medical and other costs, and decreasing the supply of and the demand for interstate products . . . I cannot emphasize enough the seriousness of the toll that we found gender-motivated violence exacts on interstate commerce. Such violence denies women an equal opportunity to compete in the job market, imposing a heavy burden on our national economy.

Witness after witness at the hearing testified that as a result of rape, sexual assault, or domestic abuse, she was fired from, forced to quit, or abandoned her job. As a result of such interference with the ability of women to work, domestic violence was estimated to cost employers billions of dollars annually because of absenteeism in the workplace. Indeed, estimates suggested that we spend between $5 and $10 billion a year on health care, criminal justice, and other social costs merely and totally as a consequence of violence against women in America. In response to this important national problem, one to which we found the States did not or could not adequately respond, Congress enacted my Violence Against Women Act in 1994, which included provisions authorizing women to sue their attackers in Federal court. This statute reflected the legislative branch's judgment that State laws and practices had failed to provide equal and adequate protection to women victimized by domestic violence and sexual assault and that the lawsuit would provide an adequate means of remedying these deficiencies.

This was no knee-jerk response to a problem. Congress specifically found that State and Federal laws failed to `adequately provide victims of gender-motivated crimes the opportunity to vindicate their interests' and that: . . . existing bias and discrimination in the criminal justice system often deprives victims of crimes of violence motivated by gender of equal protection of the laws and the redress to which they are entitled. The funny thing about these explicit congressional findings and this mountain of data, as Justice Souter in his dissent called it, showing the effects of violence against women on interstate commerce--the funny thing about this is that the Supreme Court acknowledged all of it. They said: We don't challenge that. This is the new height in their imperial judicial thinking. That is right. The Court acknowledged all of the findings of my committee.

In Morrison, the Supreme Court recognized that in contrast to the lack of findings in the legislation on the Gun-Free School Zone case, Lopez, that the civil rights provisions of the Violence Against Women Act were supported by `numerous factual findings' about the impact of gender-motivated violence on interstate commerce. But the Court also acknowledged the failure of the States to address this problem--they acknowledged the States had not addressed it before we did--noting that the assertion that there was a pervasive bias in State justice systems against victims of gender-motivated violence was supported by a `voluminous congressional record.' They acknowledged that there was this great impact on interstate commerce. They acknowledged--because I had my staff, over 4 years, survey the laws and the outcomes in all 50 States--that many State courts had a bias against women. So they acknowledged both those predicates.

Instead of according the deference typically given to congressional factual findings, supported by, as they said, a voluminous record, and without even the pretense of applying what we lawyers call the `traditional rational basis test'--that is, if the Congress has a rational basis upon which to make its finding, then we are not going to second-guess it; that is what we mean by `rational basis'--the Court simply thought it knew better. This marks the first occasion in more than 60 years that the Supreme Court has rejected explicit factual findings by Congress that a given activity substantially affects interstate commerce.

The Court justified this abandonment of deference to Congress by declaring that whether a particular activity substantially affects interstate commerce `is ultimately a judicial rather than a legislative question.' You got this? For the first time in 60 years, since back in the days of the Lochner era, the Supreme Court has come along and said they acknowledge that the Congress has these voluminous findings that interstate commerce is affected and the States aren't doing anything to deal with this national problem of violence against women; they are not doing sufficiently enough. There is a bias in their courts. We acknowledge that. But they said, notwithstanding that, the question of whether a specific activity substantially affects interstate commerce `is ultimately a judicial rather than a legislative question.' Hang on, here we go back to 1925.

As Justice Souter said in his dissent, this has it exactly backwards, for `the fact of such a substantial effect is not an issue for the courts in the first instance, but for the Congress, whose institutional capacity for gathering evidence and taking testimony far exceeds ours.' In short, in a decision that reads more like one written in 1930 than in 2000, the Court held that the judicial, not the legislative, branch of the Government was better suited to making these decisions on behalf of the American people--a conclusion that certainly would have surprised Chief Justice Marshall, the author of the seminal commerce clause decision in Gibbons v. Ogden in the early 1800s. The judgments that the Congress made in enacting the Violence Against Women Act were, in my view, the correct ones. Even if you disagree with me, though, they were the Congress' judgments to make, not the Court's judgments to make. When it struck down the Violence Against Women Act, the Court left little doubt that it was acting outside its proper judicial role. They said that the commerce clause did not justify the statute because the act of inflicting violence on women is not a `commercial' act. It said that section 5 of the 14th amendment also did not justify this act because creating a cause of action against the private perpetrators of violence is not an `appropriate' remedy for the denial of equal protection that occurs when State law enforcement fails vigorously to enforce laws that ought to protect women against such violence.

Over the course of this speech today, I have discussed seven significant decisions since 1995: Lopez, the gun-free school zones case; Boerne against Flores, the Religious Freedom Restoration Act case; Seminole Tribe and Alden, the two decisions prohibiting us from creating judicial enforceable economic rights for State employees; Florida Prepaid, the patent remedy case; Kimel, the Age Discrimination Act case; and finally, Morrison, the Violence Against Women Act case. None of them deal fatal blows to our ability to address these significant national problems, but they each, in varying degrees, make it much more difficult for us to be able to do so. There are two even more important points to make about these cases.

First, together, these cases are establishing a pattern of decisions founded on constitutional error--an error that allocates far too much authority to the Federal courts and thereby denies to the elected branches of the Federal Government the legitimate authority vested in it by the Constitution to address national problems.

Second, this is a trend that is fully capable of growing until it does deal telling blows to our ability to address significant national problems. This is not only my assessment; it is shared, for example, by Justice John Paul Stevens, who was appointed to the Court by Gerald Ford. Dissenting in the Kimel case, Justice Stevens has written that `the kind of judicial activism manifested in [these cases] represents such a radical departure from the proper role of this Court that it should be opposed whenever the opportunity arises.' That is not Joe Biden speaking; that is a sitting member of the Supreme Court appointed by a Republican President. It is also shared by Justice David Souter, who was appointed by President Bush. Dissenting in the Lopez case, Justice Souter has written that `it seems fair to ask whether the step taken by the Court today does anything but portend a return to the untenable jurisprudence from which the Court extricated itself almost 60 years ago.' He was referring to the Lochner era. It is shared by Justice Breyer, a Clinton appointee. Dissenting in College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid, Justice Breyer has written that the Court's decisions on State sovereign immunity `threaten the Nation's ability to enact economic legislation needed for the future in much the way Lochner v. New York threatened the Nation's ability to enact social legislation over 90 years ago.'

Significantly, this imperialist trend can continue to grow and flower in two different places. The Supreme Court itself can continue to write more and more aggressive decisions, cutting deeper and deeper into the people's capacity to govern themselves effectively at a national level. In the short term, perhaps the odds are that this will not occur. Many of the decisions in this pattern have been decided by votes of five Justices to four Justices, and it may be that one or more of the conservative majority has gone about as far as he or she is prepared to go at this time.

In the longer term, however, we can quite reasonably expect two or three appointments to the Court in the next 4 to 8 years, and if those appointments result in replacing moderate conservatives on the Court with activist conservatives, we have every reason to expect that this trend I have outlined for the last 45 minutes would gain momentum. It can also bloom in the lower courts. This may, to some extent, be by design of the Justices who are taking the lead in the Court today. Certainly, many people have remarked on the proclivity of Justice Scalia to author opinions containing sweeping language that creates new ambiguities in the law and which then often provide a hook on which lower court judges can hang their judicial activism.

Already, opinions have been written by lower court judges overturning the Superfund legislation, challenging the constitutionality of the Endangered Species Act, calling into doubt Federal protection of wetlands, and eviscerating the False Claims Act, among others. Not all of these judicial exercises can be corrected by the Supreme Court, even if it were inclined to do so, because the Court decides only 80 or so cases a year from the entire Federal system.

In concluding, I wish to describe in the most basic terms why the imperialist course upon which the Court has embarked constitutes a danger to our established system of government. In case after case, the Court has strayed from its job of interpreting the Constitution and has instead begun to second guess the Congress about the wisdom or necessity of enacted laws. Its opinions declare straightforwardly its new approach: The Court determines whether legislation is `appropriate,' or whether it is proportional to the problem we have validly sought to address, or whether there is enough reason for us to enact legislation that all agree is within our constitutionally defined legislative power.

If in the Court's view legislation is not appropriate, or proportional, or grounded in a sufficient sense of urgency, it is unconstitutional--even though the subject matter is within Congress' power, and even though Congress made extensive findings to support the measure. More significant than the invalidation of any specific piece of legislation, this approach annexes to the judiciary vast tracts of what are properly understood as the legislative powers. If allowed to take root, this expanded version of judicial power will undermine the project of the American people, and that project is self-government, as set forth in the Constitution. To understand the alarm that Justice Stevens, Justice Souter, and others have sounded about the Court's pattern of activism, we must understand the way the Constitution structures the Federal Government and the reasons behind that structure. We must also understand the history and the practice that have made the Constitution's blueprint a reality and provide a scale to measure when the balance of power has gone dangerously awry. These considerations amply support Justice Stevens's assessment of `a radical departure from the proper role of this Court.' The Constitution (supplemented by the Declaration of Independence) sets forth the great aspirations and objects of our nation. It does not, however, achieve them. That is the great project of American politics and government: to achieve the country envisioned in those founding documents.

The way to meet our aspirations and establish our national identity and our character as a people is through the process of self-government. The Declaration of Independence proclaims our fundamental commitment to liberty and equality. These commitments are by no means self-executing. The history of our nation is in no small part the history of a people struggling to comprehend these commitments and to put these high ideals into practice. The Constitution itself was concerned with a more complex function. Whereas the Declaration explained the reasons for splitting from Great Britain, the Constitution was concerned with explaining why the former colonies should remain united as a single nation. It was also concerned with the task of providing a government that could fulfill the promise and purposes of union.

The Framers who arrived in Philadelphia to debate and draft the Constitution were no longer immediately animated by an overbearing and oppressive government. In fact, our first national government, under the Articles of Confederation, was the precise opposite. The emergency that brought the leading citizens of the North American continent together in Philadelphia that Summer of 1787 was the inability of the national government to act in any effective way. These framers saw the vast potential of the new nation with its unparalleled natural and human resources. They saw as well the danger posed by foreign powers and domestic unrest. They realized too that the Confederation could never act credibly to exploit the nation's potential or to quell domestic and foreign hostilities.

As Alexander Hamilton put it, `[w]e may indeed with propriety be said to have reached almost the last stage of national humiliation. There is scarcely anything that can wound the pride or degrade the character of an independent nation which we do not experience.' Hamilton urged that the nation ratify the Constitution and throw off the ability of the states to constrain the national government: `Here, my countrymen, impelled by every motive that ought to influence an enlightened people, let us make a firm stand for our safety, our tranquility, our dignity, our reputation. Let us at last break the fatal charm which has too long seduced us from the paths of felicity and prosperity.' Indeed, Hamilton may have been understating the degree of the crisis.

Gouverneur Morris, a leading delegate from Pennsylvania, warned that `This country must be united. If persuasion does not unite it, the sword will . . . The scenes of horror attending civil commotion cannot be described . . . The stronger party will then make [traitors] of the weaker; and the Gallows & Halter will finish the word of the sword.' The words of the Constitution's preamble are not idle rhetoric. The founding generation ratified the Constitution in order to establish a government that could decisively and effectively act to `provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty.' This is a fundamental constitutional value that must always be brought to bear when construing the Constitution. Yet, it is precisely this constitutional value that the Supreme Court has lost sight of.

Consider, for example, Justice Kennedy's statement in the case striking down the Line Item Veto Act. `A nation cannot plunder its own treasury without putting its Constitution and its survival in peril. The statute before us then is of first importance, for it seems undeniable the Act will tend to restrain persistent excessive spending.' Who is he to make that judgment? Yet, Justice Kennedy viewed this as completely irrelevant to the statute's constitutionality. He concurred that the Line Item Veto Act violates separation of powers even though there was no obvious textual basis for this conclusion and no apparent threat to any person's liberty.

Justice Kennedy is right about one thing. His statement is premised on the view that the Court is not particularly well-suited to make policy or political judgments. This is accurate and no mere happenstance. The Constitution itself structures the judiciary and the political branches differently by design. The Judiciary is made independent of political forces. Judges hold life tenure and salaries that cannot be reduced.

The purpose of the entire structure of the judiciary is to leave judges free to apply the technical skills of the legal profession to construe and develop the law, within the confines of what can be fairly deemed legal reasoning. Outside this realm is the realm of policy. Here Congress and the President enjoy the superior place, again by constitutional design. The political branches are tied closely to the people, most obviously through popular elections. Between elections, the political branches are properly subject to the public in a host of ways. Moreover, the political branches have wide-ranging access to information through hearings, through studies we commission, and through the statistics and data we routinely gather.

This proximity to the people and to information makes Congress the most suitable repository of the legislative power; that is, the power to deliberate as agents of the public and to determine what laws and structures will best `promote the general welfare.' It is much easier to describe the distinction between the judicial and the legislative power in the abstract than it is to apply in practice.

That is why so much of our constitutional history has been devoted to developing doctrines and traditions that keep the judiciary within its proper sphere. After much upheaval, the mid-twentieth century yielded a stable and harmonious approach to questions relating to the scope of Congress's powers: these questions are largely for the political branches and the political process to resolve--not the courts.

To be sure, the Court has a role in policing the outer boundaries of this power, but it is to be extremely deferential to the specific judgment of Congress that a given statute is a necessary and proper exercise of its constitutional powers. When the Court fails to defer, as it had during several periods prior to the New Deal, it inevitably finds itself making judgments that are far outside the sphere of the judicial power.

This is the point of Justice Stevens' warning. The Court is departing from its proper role in scope of power cases. What was initially uncertain, even after Lopez and Boerne , is now inescapable: This imperial Court, in case after case, is freely imposing its own view of what constitutes sound public policy. This violates a basic theory of government so carefully set forth in our Constitution. In theory, therefore, there is ample reason to expect that the Supreme Court's recent imperialism will undermine the fundamental value animating the Constitution, and that is the ability of the American people to govern themselves effectively and democratically. I yield the floor.

REV_00125493

July 27, 2000

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I want to turn now to another issue. This time last year, I rose to express concern about the final decisions of the Supreme Court's 1998 Term, in which it struck down on federalism grounds three important pieces of bipartisan legislation. Another Supreme Court Term has now ended, and this Term's victims include the Violence Against Women Act and, as applied to State employees, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. I see my distinguished friend from Delaware in the Chamber, and I know he has spoken extensively on this. I believe it bears repeating. We have seen a growing trend of judicial second-guessing of congressional policy decisions, both in the Supreme Court and in some of the lower Federal courts. Most troubling to me is the encroachment of the Federal judiciary on the legitimate functions of the Federal legislative branch in matters that are perceived by the courts to impact the States. We ought to all be concerned about this because it affects our constitutional system of checks and balances. We ought to ask ourselves how we can have a situation where an unelected group of Supreme Court Justices can over and over substitute their judgment for the judgment of the elected representatives of this country. It is not a question of how we feel about an individual case. Sometimes I vote for these bills and sometimes I vote against them. But when we have held hearings, when we have determined that there is a need for Federal legislation, when we have gone forward, and then in an almost cavalier and, in some cases, disdainful fashion, the Supreme Court knocks it all down, something is wrong. It is time for us to join together in taking stock of the relationship between Congress and the courts. According to a recent article by Stuart Taylor, the Rehnquist Court has struck down about two dozen congressional enactments in the last five terms. That is about five per year--a stunning pace. To put that in perspective, consider that the Supreme Court struck down a total of 128 Federal statutes during its first 200 years. That is less than one per year, and it includes the years of the so-called `activist' Warren Court. Justice Scalia recently admitted that the Rehnquist Court is `striking down as many Federal statutes from year to year as the Warren Court at its peak.' In fact, the Rehnquist Court, with its seven Republican-appointed Justices, is striking down Federal statutes almost as fast as this Republican Congress can enact them. These cases evidence a breakdown of respect between the judiciary and legislative branches, and raise serious concerns about whether the Court has embarked on a program of judicial activism under the rubric of protecting State sovereignty. Let me start where I left off a year ago, with the trio of 5-4 decisions that ended the Court's last Term. In the Florida Prepaid case, the Court held that the States could no longer be held liable for infringing a Federal patent. In the College Savings Bank case, the Court held that the States could no longer be held liable for violating the Federal law against false advertising. And in Alden v. Maine, the Court held that the States could no longer be held liable for violating the Federally-protected right of their employees to get paid for overtime work. These decisions were sweeping in their breadth. They allowed special immunities not just to essential organs of State government, but also to a wide-range of State-funded or State-controlled entities and commercial ventures. They tilted the playing field by leaving institutions like the University of California entitled to benefit from Federal intellectual property laws, but immune from enforcement if they violate those same laws. They were also startling in their reasoning, casting aside the text of the Constitution, inferring broad immunities from abstract generalizations about federalism, and second-guessing Congress' reasoned judgment about the need for national remedial legislation. When I discussed these decisions last year, I warned that they could endanger a wide range of other Federally-protected rights, including rights to a minimum wage, rights against certain forms of discrimination, and whatever rights we might one day provide to health coverage. This year's crop of 5-to-4 decisions continued the trend toward restricting individual rights and diminishing the authority of Congress to act on behalf of all Americans in favor of protecting State prerogatives. The predictions I made last year have unfortunately come to pass with this year's Supreme Court decisions. In Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, the Court held that State employees are not protected by the Federal law banning age discrimination, notwithstanding Congress' clearly expressed intent. Five members of the Court decided that age discrimination protections applied to the States were unnecessary. The Congress and the American people had it wrong when we concluded that age discrimination by State employers was a problem that needed a solution. None of those five Justices sat in on the hearings that Congress held 30 years ago, they did not hear the victims of age discrimination describe their experiences, but they nonetheless decided they knew better than Congress did. Justice Thomas wrote separately to say that he was prepared to go even further and make it even harder for Congress to apply anti-discrimination laws to the States. The Kimel decision could spell trouble for all sorts of Federal laws, including other laws prohibiting discrimination in the workplace and regulating wages and hours and health and safety standards. The Supreme Court majority has now told us, after the fact, that we in Congress have to `build a record,' like an administrative agency, before they will allow us to protect State employees from discrimination, but it has not made it entirely clear just how many victims of discrimination have to come before us and testify before it will allow us to give them legislative protection. The signs, however, are ominous: the week after it decided Kimel, the Court vacated two lower court decisions holding that States must abide by the Equal Pay Act, calling into question the ability of Congress to offer State employees protection from sex discrimination. Next Term, in University of Alabama v. Garrett, the Court will decide whether States can be held liable for discriminating against employees with disabilities. That plaintiff in Garrett is a State employee--a nurse at the University of Alabama--who was diagnosed with breast cancer, and was demoted after taking sick leave to undergo surgery and chemotherapy. The second blow this Term to congressional authority was United States v. Morrison, which struck down a portion of the Violence Against Women Act that provides a Federal remedy for victims of sexual assault and violence. The Violence Against Women Act had been our measured response to the horrifying effects of violence on women's lives nationwide, not only on their physical well-being but also on their ability to carry on their lives and their jobs as they are driven into hiding by stalking and prevented from going out at night in some areas by fear of rape. After hearing a mountain of evidence detailing the impact of violence on women's lives and interstate commerce, I was proud to work with Senator Biden, Senator Hatch, Senator Kennedy and others in an overwhelming bipartisan consensus in 1994 to enact VAWA. But the five-Justice majority was unimpressed with the evidence, and with the common-sense point that violence affects women's lives, including their participation in commerce. Relying once again on abstract notions of federalism, the Court decided that violence against women does not affect interstate commerce enough, or rather, it affects interstate commerce, but in the wrong sort of way, so Congress has no business protecting American women from violence. One Justice said he would cut even more into Congress' power, saying we had very little business doing much of what we had done throughout the 20th century. Frankly, I do not want to see us turn back, in the 21st century, to a 19th century view. What made this latest `federalism' decision all the more remarkable is that the vast majority of the States, whose rights the Court's `federalism' decision are supposed to protect, had urged the Court to uphold the

REV_00125499

VAWA Federal remedy. The Kimel and Morrison decisions are troubling, both for what they do to the rights of ordinary Americans, and for what they say about the relationship between Congress and the present majority of the Supreme Court. State's rights and individual rights are both essential to our constitutional scheme, and the Court has a constitutional duty to prevent the Congress from encroaching on them. I have spoken before about the need to restrain the congressional impulse to federalize more local crimes. There are significant policy downsides to such federalization, however, that do not apply in other areas, where each American, no matter what State he or she lives in, should have the same rights and protections. The legislative judgments we make that are reflected in the laws we pass deserve more respect than the Rehnquist Court has shown. It is troubling when five unelected Justices repeatedly second-guess our collective judgments as to whether discrimination and violence against women and other major social problems are serious enough, or affect commerce in the right sort of way, to merit a legislative response. It is even more troubling when a Justice steps out of his judicial role, and beyond the judgment calls inherent in individual cases, to express a generalized disdain for the legislative branch. Yet, that is precisely what Justice Scalia did in a recent speech, in which he suggested that the oath to uphold the Constitution that each of us takes counts for nothing, and that Acts of Congress should be stripped of their traditional presumption of constitutionality. Justice Scalia is as free as the next citizen to express his mind, but that sort of open disrespect for Congress coming from a sitting Supreme Court Justice bodes ill for democracy, and for the delicate balance of power between the Congress, the President and the courts on which our Constitution rests. I am also fearful that Justice Scalia's remarks are becoming a rallying cry for Federal judges around the country who are hostile to Congress and to some of our efforts to protect ordinary people from discrimination, from violence, from invasions of privacy and violations of civil liberties, and from environmental and other health hazards. The Federal appeals court in Richmond, Virginia--the Fourth Circuit--has the dubious honor of leading this charge with radical new legal theories that cut back on Federal power and individual rights. In January, the Supreme Court unanimously reversed a Fourth Circuit decision invalidating a Federal law that prohibits States from disclosing personal information from motor vehicle records. The Fourth Circuit had held that this common-sense privacy law violated abstract notions of federalism. As we have seen, it takes a lot to outdo the present Supreme Court in raising abstract federalism principles over individual rights. Also in January, the Supreme Court overwhelmingly rejected the Fourth Circuit's reasoning in a case involving citizen `standing' in Federal court to sue polluters who violate our environmental laws. The Fourth Circuit decision had sharply limited the ability of citizens to sue polluters and win civil penalties. The Supreme Court reversed that decision by a 7-2 vote, with Justice Scalia and Justice Thomas dissenting. The Fourth Circuit is even more consistently hostile to civil rights in matters of criminal law and civil liberties. In death penalty cases, for example, it seems to have embraced a doctrine of State infallibility. An article in the American Lawyer last month reported that: [Page: S7759] GPO's PDF

REV_00125501

While condemned inmates' rates of at least partial success in Federal habeas corpus actions run at close to 40 percent nationally, the rate in the 4th Circuit since October 1995 has been a cool 0 percent, with more than 80 consecutive convictions having been upheld. In May, a unanimous Supreme Court, a Court that itself espouses the general belief that the rights of capital defendants are best protected by the State justice system that seeks to execute them, overturned two Fourth Circuit decisions that denied habeas corpus relief to death row inmates who had been sentenced to death on the basis of grossly unfair procedures. Just last month, the Fourth Circuit lost its bid to overturn the Supreme Court's landmark decision in Miranda v. Arizona. The Fourth Circuit's notion that it had the right to overturn a longstanding Supreme Court precedent was unorthodox, to say the least. By a 7-2 vote, in which Justices Scalia and Thomas dissented again, the Court reaffirmed the 34-year-old precedent that requires the police to inform suspects of their right to remain silent. What we are seeing in the Fourth Circuit is unparalleled, but not unrivaled. Other Federal courts across the country are also embracing Justice Scalia's `no-deference' philosophy and busily redefining the relationship of the judiciary to the other branches of government. The D.C. Circuit departed from a half century of Supreme Court separation-of-powers jurisprudence to strike down air quality standards established by the EPA under the Clean Air Act, a crucial statute passed during the Nixon administration that has improved the air we breath for the last three decades. Meanwhile, in a striking throw-back to the Lochner era of economic libertarian `natural law' theory, the Federal Circuit has adopted an unusually expansive reading of the Takings Clause that threatens to undermine basic environmental protections that Congress has established. Likewise, Federal district courts in Texas have recently rendered radical decisions, limiting the Federal Government's authority to enforce basic food safety standards. Republican detractors of the Ninth Circuit often refer to that court's high reversal rate in the Supreme Court. But about half of the Ninth Circuit decisions that the Supreme Court reversed this year were written by Reagan and Bush appointees. Moreover, set against the reversal record of other circuits, the Ninth Circuit, which has the largest caseload of all the Federal appeals courts, looks about average. Courts with half or a third of the caseload of the Ninth Circuit have more than their share of reversals. The Fourth Circuit was reversed five times this year, as was the Fifth Circuit. The overwhelmingly Republican-appointed judges of the Seventh Circuit were reversed in five out of seven cases this year. I have spoken at some length about this growing trend of judicial decisions second-guessing the congressional judgments embodied in laws that apply to the States because I am deeply concerned about what they mean for the relationship between the judicial and the legislative branches and for our democracy. When a Supreme Court Justice, one held up by some of my Republican friends as a paragon of judicial restraint, declares that no deference, no respect, is owed to the democratic decisions of Congress, Americans should be concerned. We here in the Senate have a responsibility to safeguard democratic values. That does not mean that we should be strident, or disrespectful; we should always cherish judicial independence even when we dislike the results. We should, however, defend vigorously our democratic role as the peoples' elected representatives. When we see bipartisan policies, supported by a vast majority of the American people, being overturned time and time again on the basis of abstract notions of federalism, it is our right, and our duty, to voice our concerns. And when the rights of ordinary Americans are defeated by technicalities in the courts and by abstract notions of `State's rights' that the States themselves do not support, it is our responsibility to work together to find new ways to protect them. I have tried to do that. A year ago, I voiced my concerns about the Supreme Court's 1999 State sovereign immunity decisions, as did some of my colleagues, including Senator Biden and Senator Specter. I warned then of their potential impacts on the civil rights of American workers. As we have seen, my fears became a disturbing reality in the Kimel case. I have also tried to begin work on restoring the integrity of our national intellectual property system, in the Intellectual Property Protection Restoration Act, S. 1835, a bill I introduced last October. That bill would restore intellectual property protections while meeting all the Court's constitutional objections, however questionable they are. I am delighted that a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee held a hearing today to explore ways to undo the damage done to our intellectual property system by the Court's 1999 decisions. I hope that the Senate Judiciary Committee will consider and act on this important issue, which it has ignored all year. These are issues we should all be working on together. Republicans and Democrats can agree on the importance of protecting civil rights, intellectual property rights, privacy and other rights of ordinary Americans that recent doctrinaire judicial decisions have impaired. We can also agree on the importance of protecting Congress as an institution from repeated judicial second-guessing of policy judgments on matters that affect the States. It is important for Congress, as an institution, to focus on making our relationship with the Federal judiciary a more constructive and mutually respectful one. Here in the Senate, where the Constitution requires us to give our `advice and consent' on judicial nominations, we have a special responsibility in this regard, a responsibility to protect both democratic values and judicial independence. The disgraceful manner in which the Senate has treated judicial nominees does not help and may be a factor in the current breakdown of respect between the legislative and judicial branches. Too often, judicial nominees have been put through a litmus test by my Republican colleagues to determine whether they will engage in `liberal judicial activism.' In fact, I cannot remember a recent judicial nomination hearing in which one of my

Republican friends has not made a speech about `liberal activist judges.' Strangely, however, hardly a mention is made of traditional judicial activism--striking down democratically-adopted laws with which one happens to disagree based on abstract principles with no basis in the Constitution, as the Supreme Court did in the age discrimination case, or overturning the long-standing precedent of a higher court, as the Fourth Circuit did in the Miranda case. Nor do my colleagues seem troubled by Justice Scalia's disdain for Congress. But I know that my Republican friends are very concerned about `liberal judicial activism.' The terms of this test change depending on the circumstances. From what I can gather, the easiest way to spot `liberal judicial activists' is by the company they keep. You might call it the `activist by association' principle. Over the last few years, several outstanding judicial nominees have come under attack simply because, as young lawyers out of law school, they clerked for Supreme Court Justice William Brennan. These nominees were tarred as potential activists not because of anything they had done, but because of their one-year association with a distinguished and respected member of the United States Supreme Court. This test is applied only to delay or oppose nominees--clerking for a conservative justice like Chief Justice Rehnquist has not helped Allen Snyder, a nominee to a vacancy on the D.C. Circuit who has been held up in Committee for months. Maybe someone should send a warning to the students at the Nation's top law schools that the Senate has become so partisan that clerking for the Supreme Court can damage your career. Other nominees were challenged because of their association with legal organizations such as the American Civil Liberties Union and the Woman's Legal Defense Fund or for contributing time to pro bono activities. Maybe we should publish a list of groups you cannot associate with, and of rights and liberties you cannot work to protect in your private life, if you want to be a Federal judge. How else can we tell if a nominee will be a `liberal judicial activist'? In the case of Margaret Morrow, it was unfounded allegations that she was skeptical toward California voter initiatives. With respect to Marsha Berzon we were told that she would be an activist judge because she had been an `aggressive' advocate for her client, the AFL-CIO. Maybe we should advise lawyers in private practice who would like to be judges to be less vigorous in pursuing their clients' interests. Of course, since their confirmations neither of these nominees has been cited to be anything other than an outstanding judge. Then there is the old-fashioned litmus test. As a member of the Missouri Supreme Court, Justice White had committed the heresy of voting to reverse death sentences in some cases for serious legal error. No matter that Justice White voted to uphold the imposition of the death penalty 41 times. No matter that other members of the Missouri Supreme Court, including members of the Court appointed by Republican governors, had similar voting records and more often than not agreed with Justice White, both when he voted to uphold the death penalty and when he joined with a majority of that Court to reverse and remand such cases for resentencing or a new trial. Maybe someone should have advised Justice White to follow the Fourth Circuit model and bat a thousand for the State in death penalty cases, regardless of the evidence. Another litmus test that has been dressed up as a sign of `liberal judicial activism': The nominee's willingness to enforce Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court's landmark abortion decision. I confess to some confusion as to how a nominee for a lower Federal court could be faulted for promising to adhere to established Supreme Court precedent. Whether you agree with Roe or not, it is, after all, the law of the land. But maybe someone should advise lower court judges to follow the lead of the Fourth Circuit in the Miranda case and disregard Supreme Court precedent. We need to get away from rhetoric and litmus tests, and focus on rebuilding a constructive relationship between Congress and the courts. We need balance and moderation that respects the democratic will and the weight of precedent. We do not need partisan delays by anonymous Senators because a nominee clerked for Justice Brennan or contributed to the legal services organization. We do not need our Federal courts further packed for ideological purity. We do not need nominees put on hold for years, as this Republican Senate has done, while we screen them for their Republican sympathies and associations. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record three recent articles about the Supreme Court's jurisprudential counterrevolution, by Professor Larry Kramer of the New York University School of Law; Professor David Cole of Georgetown University Law Center; and John Echeverria, Director of Environmental Policy Project at Georgetown University Law Center. There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows: [Page: S7761] GPO's PDF From the Washington Post, May 23, 2000

[FROM THE WASHINGTON POST, MAY 23, 2000] The Arrogance of the Court (BY LARRY KRAMER) In 1994, after four years of very public debate, including testimony from hundreds of experts in dozens of hearings, Congress enacted the Violence Against Women Act. This month, a bare 5 to 4 majority of the Supreme Court brushed all that aside and struck the law down. Why? Not because Congress cannot regulate intrastate matters that `affect' interstate commerce. On the contrary, the majority agreed that this is permitted by the Constitution, reaffirming a long-standing point of law. But, the court said, whether the effects are `substantial' enough to warrant federal regulation `is ultimately a judicial rather than a legislative question, and can be settled finally only by this Court.' And the majority just was not persuaded. This is an astonishing ruling from a court that professes to care about democratic majorities and respect the political process. The justices did much more in this decision than sweep the act off the books. Under a pretense of interpreting the Constitution, they declared that they have the final say about the expediency of an important, and potentially very large, class of federal laws: not just laws under the Commerce Power, which constitute the bulk of modern federal legislation, but many other laws as well. For the limits of all Congress's powers turn eventually on judgments about the need for federal action. This is radical stuff. Previous courts have exercised aggressive judicial review, but never like this. Nothing in the Constitution's language or history supports letting the Supreme Court strike down laws just because it disagrees with Congress's assessment of how much they are needed. Except for a brief period in the 1930s when an earlier court tried to stop FDR's New Deal and was decisively repudiated, the court's role has always ended once it was clear that legislation was rationally related to the exercise of a constitutional power. As Alexander Hamilton observed back in 1792, rejecting the very same argument as that made by the court today, `the degree in which a measure is necessary can never be a test of the legal right to adopt it.' The Founding generation understood, in a way our generation seems to have forgotten, that judicial review must be contained or we lose the essence of self-government. They saw that, while courts have a vital role to play in protecting individuals and minorities from laws that trample their rights, Congress's decisions respecting the need to exercise its legislative power must otherwise be left to voters and elections. They foresaw that questions would arise over the limits of federal authority vis-a-vis the states. But, they said (over and over again), those battles must be waged in the political arena. And so they have been, until now. What kind of government is it when five justices of the Supreme Court, appointed for life by presidents whose mandates expired long ago, can cavalierly override the decision of a democratically elected legislature not on the ground that it acted irrationally but because they do not like its reasoning? By what right do these judges claim the authority to second-guess what Justice Souter in dissent accurately described as a `mountain of data' based on nothing more than their contrary intuitions? This is important. We have become way too complacent about letting the Supreme Court run our lives, and the current court has exploited this apathy to extend its authority to unheard of lengths. Everyone in the country should be incensed by this decision; not because the Violence Against Women Act was so wonderful or so necessary, but because deciding that it is not--and make no mistake, that is all the majority did--is none of the Supreme Court's business. Yet liberals will sit awkwardly by because they liked the judicial activism we got from the Warren court, though that court could not touch this one for activism. And, of course, conservatives will gleefully hold their tongues because they never much liked this law in the first place, and because they adore the court's new federalism (not to mention the chance to see liberals hoist by their own petard). In the meantime, only democratic government suffers. Ironies this thick would be comical were the stakes not so high. The majority opinion is animated by a sense that the Framers of our Constitution never imagined the federal government enacting laws such as the violence act. I am sure they are right; the Framers would be astounded at the changes in society that have brought us to this juncture. But nowhere near as flabbergasted as they would be at the presumptuousness of five judges in casting aside the considered judgment of the national legislature for no better reasons than these--or at the complacency of the citizenry in the face of such outrageous conduct. --

REV_00125512

From The Nation, June 12, 2000 [FROM THE NATION, JUNE 12, 2000] Paper Federalists (BY DAVID COLE)

When conservatives attack Supreme Court decisions (admittedly an increasingly rare event these days), they inevitably charge `judicial activism.' Miranda warnings, the right to abortion, the exclusionary rule--all are condemned for having been created by judges out of whole cloth, based on `interpretations' of the Constitution that are so unconstrained as to be entirely political. When it comes to `states' rights,' however, conservatives sing a different tune. In the past few years, the conservative majority on the Supreme Court has launched a virtual revolution in constitutional jurisprudence, invalidating a host of federal laws on the ground that they violate the autonomy not of human beings but of states. The Court has revived the commerce clause as a limitation on federal power after some fifty-odd years of desuetude. It has found implicit in the Constitution a concept of `state sovereign immunity' that jeopardizes Congress's ability to require states to follow federal law. And it has divined from the `spirit' of the inscrutable Tenth Amendment a principle of state autonomy with little textual or historical basis. In doing these things, the Court's most conservative Justices--Rehnquist, Scalia, Kennedy, O'Connor and Thomas--have engaged in the very sort of open-ended, freewheeling constitutional interpretation that they excoriate liberals for indulging in on issues of individual rights. This Court's activism on federalism begins with the commerce clause, which for most of our history has been the leading barometer of judicial attitudes toward the balance between state and federal power. In the early part of the twentieth century the Court frequently invoked the clause to strike down labor laws regulating minimum wages, maximum hours and working conditions. The Court reasoned that Congress could regulate only `commerce,' not manufacturing or production, although its actual animating principle was a commitment to laissez-faire capitalism. During the New Deal, the Court abandoned this approach and acknowledged that in our increasingly national economy, the terms of production--such as wages, hours and working conditions--obviously affect interstate commerce. It ultimately interpreted the commerce clause to permit Congress to regulate any local activity that, aggregated nationally, might substantially affect interstate trade, a reading that largely took the judiciary out of the job of restraining Congress and relied on the political process to do so. That's where things stood until 1995, when the Court struck down a federal law prohibiting the possession of guns near schools. Then, on May 15, the Court invalidated the Violence Against Women Act, a federal law enabling victims of gender-motivated violence to sue their attackers. In both cases the Court held that Congress may not regulate local `noneconomic' activity. Neither gun possession nor gender-motivated violence is `economic' activity and must be left to the states to regulate. Congress's findings that violence against women reduces their ability to participate in the work force was insufficient to justify federal regulation. But if Congress has the power to regulate conduct where it `affects' interstate commerce, why should it matter whether the conduct itself is labeled `economic' or `noneconomic'? The Court seems to have created a distinction every bit as artificial as the long-rejected line between production and commerce. The Court's activism is even more pronounced in its treatment of `state sovereign immunity,' the doctrine that the sovereign--in this case a state--may not be sued. The Eleventh Amendment to the Constitution does recognize a very limited immunity that protects states from being sued by citizens of other states in federal court, at least for cases not based on federal law violations. But today's Court has ignored the explicit language of the amendment to create an expansive immunity that blocks virtually all private suites against states, in state or federal court, under state or federal law. As a result, state employees cannot sue their employer--anywhere--for blatant violations of federal laws, such as the Fair Labor Standards Act. The only exception to this state immunity is where Congress has authorized suits under the Fourteenth Amendment, but the Court has also sharply limited Congress' power to regulate states under that amendment. A third arena for the states' rights revival is the Tenth Amendment. That provision has literally no substantive meaning. It states only that all powers not assigned to the federal government are reserved to the states or the people. The Court once dismissed it as `a truism.' But in recent years, the conservative majority has found in its `spirit' the authority to strike down federal statutes for requiring state officers to carry out even very minimal tasks in furtherance of a federal program, such as the Brady Bill's requirement that local sheriffs conduct brief background checks on would-be gun purchasers. So why do states' rights issues drive conservative Justices to abandon their cherished principle of judicial restraint? There is undeniably a conservative cast to federalism in the United States. States' rights have nearly always been invoked in support of rightwing causes, from slavery to segregation to welfare devolution.

REV_00125517

But no one would seriously suggest that today's Court is using federalism as a cover to protect those who carry guns near schools or rape women. What really drives the conservative Justices toward states' rights is their antipathy to individual rights. `States' rights' is itself something of an oxymoron; rights generally describe legal claims that people assert against government, not claims of governments. Protecting states' rights nearly always directly reduces protection for individual rights. The Court's sovereign immunity decisions bar individuals from suing states for violating their federal rights. And its commerce clause and Fourteenth Amendment decisions have reduced Congress's ability to create federal statutory rights for individuals in the first place. The link between protecting the `rights' of states and disregarding those of individuals is illustrated even more clearly in the Rehnquist Court's treatment of habeas corpus and federal injunctions. The Court has consistently cited deference to the states to justify shrinking the rights of state prisoners to go to federal court for review of their constitutional claims. And it has grandly invoked `Our Federalism' to limit the ability of federal courts to oversee and enjoin police abuse against minorities. Paradoxically, then, this Court is most activist in restricting its own power. The conservative Justices eagerly engage in open-ended constitutional interpretation

when the result forecloses an avenue for rights protection but assail their liberal counterparts for doing so when the result is to recognize an individual right. As a result, states receive far more solicitude than individuals. But the opposite should be the case: The Court's highest calling is not the protection of regimes but of individuals who cannot obtain protection from the political process. --

[Page: S7762] GPO's PDF It's Conservatives Now Who Are Judicial Activists: Why Environmentalists Should Be Alarmed (BY JOHN ECHEVERRIA) Recent federal court decisions concerning our environmental laws cry out for a giant reality check on the recently renewed political debate about whether federal judges should be `strict constructionists' when it comes to deciding issues of constitutional law. Governor George W. Bush last month revived a familiar GOP mantra when he declared that he would only appoint `strict constructionists' as opposed to `judicial activists' to the federal bench. This stance echoes similar statements by Bob Dole, the GOP standard bearer three years ago, as well as by paterfamilias George Bush I and the modern GOP's founding father, Ronald Reagan. Governor Bush's political declaration has a kind of through-the-looking-glass quality all too familiar in modern American political life. While Bush and others on the political right decry judicial activism, in some arenas of constitutional law, particularly those affecting our environmental laws, it is GOP-appointed judges who are actually the most activist. On the other hand, out of a habit of supporting an expansive approach to constitutional interpretation, which apparently served their ideological interests in the past befuddled democratic forces rise to the bait of defending the judiciary against charges of `judicial activism' even as their environmental protection gains, achieved through hard-fought battles in the political arena, are being taken away by GOP-appointed judicial activists. Sensible conversation about the virtues and limitations of a `strict constructionist' approach to judicial interpretation calls in the first instances for an accurate understanding of how the federal bench is actually deciding real cases today. In simplistic terms, a judge is said to be a `strict constructionist' if she resolves constitutional cases solely on the basis of the language and original understanding of the constitutional text. On the other hand, a judge who looks to other sources for interpretive assistance, such as some particular social or economic philosophy, is said to engage in judicial activism. Governor Bush left undefined the specific rulings he thinks reflects judicial activism. But similar GOP pronouncements in the past honed in on the U.S. Supreme Court's expansion of the constitutional rights of the criminally accused under the leadership of Chief Justice Earl Warren in the 1950's and 60's. Another favorite target has been the Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, which interpreted the Constitution to create a zone of privacy granting women the constitutional right to decide whether or not to terminate a pregnancy without state interference. Whether or not these (now somewhat dated) judicial innovations can fairly be characterized as the product of an activist judiciary, it is undeniably true that the charge of judicial activism can, with at least equal fairness, be lodged against more recent judicial decisions that serve a so-called `conservative' 'philosophy. This is particularly true in cases involving constitutional challenges to the authority of government to adopt and enforce environmental regulations. Consider the following examples. Over the last decade, the U.S. Supreme Court has issued an unbroken string of decisions expanding public liability under the takings clause of the Fifth Amendment for environmental and land-use regulations that impinge on private property interests, undermining the ability of the government to adopt new environmental protection standards. The takings clause states that `private property [shall not] be taken for public use, without just compensation.' According to leading scholars on all sides of the ideological spectrum, the available historical evidence unequivocally shows that the drafters of the Bill of Rights intended the clause to apply only to direct appropriations of private property, and never intended the clause to apply to regulations under any circumstances. In its recent decisions, however, the Court has established the takings clause as a significant new constraint on environmental regulatory authority. From the standpoint of a principled strict constructionist, this direction in judicial thinking would be simply indefensible. The same is true of recent Supreme Court decisions limiting citizens' right to sue to enforce federal health and environmental laws. There is a general academic consensus that the drafters of the Constitution intended Congress to have broad power to grant private citizens the right to bring suits in their own names to enforce federal laws. Nevertheless, over the last decade the U.S. Supreme Court, led by Justice Antonin Scalia, has erected new barriers which citizens must cross to establish their right to bring suit to enforce environmental laws. The Court's recent decisions for example, have severely undermined the Clean Water Act and the Endangered Species Act, and more particularly the role Congress intended for citizens in enforcing those laws, a result which principled advocate of a non-activist judiciary should supposedly abhor. Conservatives living in glass houses might start a move toward a more sensible debate by refraining from hurling rocks in the direction of the federal judiciary. Or perhaps liberals may wish to rethink a strategy based on warding off rocks tossed by others, and may wish to consider hurling a few of their own. Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I see my good friend from Utah on the floor. I yield the floor.

MEMORANDUM FOR ANDREW CARD

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES

SUBJECT: Payment for Travel on Military Aircraft

This memorandum summarizes certain principles and past practices governing travel on military aircraft, and recommends policies for this Administration to follow (assuming that the Office of Administration and White House Military Office agree).

As an initial matter, it bears emphasis that no specific laws or regulations speak to these precise issues. In adopting their policies, past Administrations have reasoned from custom, common sense, and general principles of appropriations law in devising policies to govern these issues.

Guests on Air Force One for Trips Other than Political Trips

The practice of both President Clinton and President and Bush was as follows: Unless the trip is a political trip, the President is considered to be traveling on official business and need not reimburse for his travel. Unless the trip is a political trip, individuals who travel on Air Force One at the invitation of the President travel as official guests of the President or Vice President and need not reimburse.

We recommend that you continue this policy.

First Lady's Travel on Military Aircraft

It has been the policy of the last several Administrations to provide military aircraft for travel of the First Lady. We recommend that you continue this policy.

Before the Clinton Administration, it does not appear that there was a written policy governing travel by the First Lady in those cases where she traveled without the President.

The written policy of President Clinton regarding such travel of the First Lady was as follows: If the First Lady is traveling on official business, no reimbursement is required for her or for any employees or guests traveling with her. If the First Lady is traveling for a political event, the RNC or other entity must reimburse. If the First Lady is traveling on personal business, both the First Lady and her guests must reimburse at the full commercial economy class rate, plus tax, plus one dollar. (As discussed below with respect to the President's travel, when the First Lady travels for an unofficial purpose, there nonetheless may be certain government employees who travel with her for an official purpose.)

We recommend that you follow this policy for travel by the First Lady without the President.

Travel of Those Who Accompany President on Political Travel

The practice of both President Clinton and President Bush was as follows: Government officers or employees who travel with the President or Vice President on political trips are on official duty so long as they do not engage in political activity and are traveling with the President or Vice President for an official purpose. Under the policies adopted by Presidents Clinton and Bush, certain government officers and employees are, by definition, always traveling on official business when traveling with the President. They include the Chief of Staff, Personal Aide to the President, President's secretary, doctor, photographer, National Security Advisor, Director of the White House Military Office, and Secret Service and military personnel.

We recommend that you continue this policy.

On political or mixed political/official trips, the Clinton Administration considered all officials from the Office of Political Affairs to be traveling politically. While this is the likely result in most cases, we recommend that this be only a presumption rather than a fixed rule.

Helicopter Transportation

The practice of both President Clinton and President Bush was as follows. Use of DOD helicopters by the President or Vice President is considered an official security measure and, therefore, not reimbursable. When the trip is political and the helicopter is the sole source of transportation, the RNC or other entity will reimburse for the costs associated with the helicopter travel. There may be other cases where individual billing is also appropriate, as where political guests accompany the President on the helicopter. Billing in such cases will be pro-rated based on number of passengers, flight time, and hourly operating cost.

Matt: The facsimiles to which you are referring would be governed solely by the Presidential Records Act, not by the Federal Records Act, or the Armstrongdecisions/orders which related to the records management of federal records. Accordingly, any records management issues regarding these faxes should be referred to White House Records Management (Terry Good), who then would coordinate any decision with White House Counsel. Sorry, I was not more helpful, but I can only advise you with regard to requirements for federal records. Kate

Subject: ARMS Requirements for Fax Server

Kate,

The Mail Analysis (MA) of the Presidential Correspondence Office uses two facsimiles to receive faxes addressed to the President. These two facsimiles run around the clock and generate lots of paper (and burn trees too). MA likes to install a Fax Server that will allow them to receive faxes electronically. All incoming faxes will be saved as images and can be printed on demand. The question is: does the Fax Server meet the ARMS requirements? If not, what should we do to make the Fax Server ARMS compliant?

Thanks,
Matthew Yin

As Judge Gonzales and others are aware, I have had meetings with staff of Senators Kohl and Feingold regarding whether we would be using the Wisconsin commission. The bottom line is that we have told Kohl and Feingold that we are still reviewing the matter and will get back to them. We promised them in the meantime that we would take no steps toward filling the one vacancy on the Dist Ct in Wisconsin without first concluding our discussions re the commission.

STATEMENT
By Dr. Lewis J. Bellardo
Deputy Archivist of the United States National Archives and Records Administration
Washington, DC

To the Subcommittee on Government Efficiency, Financial Management and Intergovernmental Relations
Of the Committee on Government Reform
House of Representatives Congress of the United States

April 5, 2001

Mr. Chairman, I want to begin by thanking you for holding this hearing on H.R. 577. As the Deputy Archivist of the United States and former Acting Director of the Office of Presidential Libraries of the National Archives, I am delighted to be able to join you this morning to offer some background on the Libraries system and what we think are its multiple benefits to scholarship, public policy, education, and a more complete understanding of our democracy. As I think the Chairman knows, this has been a most successful public-private partnership and we greatly appreciate the opportunity to explain why it has succeeded for 60 years and 11 presidential administrations and how the system works.

When you invite an archivist to testify, we must start with a little history.

REV_00125646

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE PRESIDENTIAL LIBRARY SYSTEM

Sixty years ago Franklin D. Roosevelt proposed creating a Presidential Library that would be a part of an institution whose growth he had shepherded – the National Archives. Roosevelt suggested a novel and innovative approach – he would donate the land and build the library with private funding and then give the library and his papers to the National Archives. On June 30, 1941, as the war in Europe threatened democracy, Roosevelt dedicated his library at Hyde Park. His words of dedication remain important today.

> To bring together the records of the past and to house them in buildings where they will be preserved for the use of men and women in the future, a Nation must believe in three things.
> It must believe in the past.
>
> It must believe in the future.
> It must, above all, believe in the capacity of its own people so to learn from the past that they can gain judgement in creating their own future.

In the services it provided for its researchers, its extensive collection of Roosevelt materials, and the incorporation of a museum experience for hundreds of thousands of visitors a year, the Roosevelt Library became the model for the presidential library system, which soon began to grow.

President Truman, deploring the loss of presidential papers in the past, stated "such destruction should never again be permitted…because the truth behind a President's actions can be found only in his official papers, and every Presidential paper is official." Originally, Truman considered depositing his papers at the National Archives, in Washington, DC, but by 1950, he decided on a presidential library in his hometown of Independence, Missouri. Truman strongly felt that presidential libraries were not to be monuments to a president but centers for the study of the presidency. The Truman Institute, established to build and support the library, has a long history of sponsoring intellectual exchanges through conferences and the Truman Grants program for the study of the presidency.

Dwight D. Eisenhower's clear support of the development of a library at the site of the already established Eisenhower Museum in Abilene, Kansas prompted Congress to pass The Presidential Libraries Act of 1955 (44 U.S.C. 2108). The legislation had full bipartisan support and was hailed by scholars and educators. This Act provided continuing legal authority for the government to accept the gift of a Presidential Library.

President Hoover had originally given his papers to Stanford, but responded favorably to a request of a citizens committee from his hometown for the development of a library in West Branch, IA. His library became the third added to the system in 1962. The Eisenhower Library was also opened in 1962 and a pattern, which has remained unbroken, was established.

Over time, however, the venue for a Presidential Library shifted from the President's hometown, to larger metropolitan areas or a university campus. This often means three and even four way partnerships, as the library foundation, the university, and the local community come together to build a presidential center. The Presidential Libraries Act of 1955 presciently enabled this by authorizing the government to enter into agreements with any State or political subdivision, universities and institutions of higher learning, institute or foundation for the purposes of utilizing land, buildings, and equipment for a Presidential Archival Depository. The John F. Kennedy Library is adjacent to the University of Massachusetts; the Lyndon B. Johnson Library and Museum is on the University of Texas at Austin campus; the Gerald Ford Library is at the University of Michigan; the Jimmy Carter Library is on the campus of Emory University; the George Bush Library is part of Texas A & M University; and the William Jefferson Clinton Library will be affiliated with the University of Arkansas at Little Rock.

In 1986 Congress passed various amendments to the previous Act to reduce the costs of operating Presidential libraries. 44 U.S.C. 2112 requires that an endowment equal to 20% of the cost of the building be transferred to the government at the time the Library is turned over to the government. Libraries larger than 70,000 sq. ft. are to be accompanied by an endowment that increases geometrically in accordance with the size of the building. The Act also required the Archivist to promulgate architectural and design standards for the preservation of materials and the inclusion of adequate research facilities. The Bush Library is the first Library required to have an endowment. On the day the Bush Library was dedicated, the Bush Foundation presented a check for $4 million to the National Archives Trust Fund. A serious concern faced by those planning new libraries is the failure of the new Act to distinguish the differences in archival storage requirements for a one-term versus a two-term President.

The 1986 Act did not change the requirement that the Archivist submit a written report to Congress prior to accepting a library but it did set forth the specific information required in the report. The Archivist may not accept the Library until the expiration of a period of 60 days of continuous session of Congress beginning on the day the Archivist transmits the report. The report must include:

- A description of the proposed gift.

REV_00125649

- A statement specifying the total cost and the amount to be deposited in an endowment.
- A general description of any papers, documents, or historical materials proposed to be deposited in the library.
- An estimate of the increase in the total annual cost to the United States of maintaining, operating, and protecting the depository.
- A certification that the depository and the equipment therein will, comply with the standards promulgated by the archivist.

PRESIDENTIAL MATERIALS

Throughout the 18th, 19th, and well into the 20th century, no one questioned the private ownership of Presidential papers by the President. Former Presidents could donate them to a library or archives, or not, as they saw fit. Fortunately, many presidential papers were donated and are available for historical research today. On the other hand, many were accidentally or purposely destroyed. Biographers of George Washington snipped out pages of Washington's diaries. Chester Arthur burned his papers. Former Presidents and their families exercised considerable discretion in what they donated resulting in selective donation and selective destruction. One very powerful reason the National Archives wanted libraries built and given to the National Archives was that this donation of a library meant the National Archives would also receive the President's papers. In its time this system of donation worked very well. While there was nothing mandatory in the legislation for presidential libraries requiring that presidents systematically preserve their presidential papers, the legislation assured a president who donated his materials to the National Archives that the integrity of his papers would be preserved. The papers would be cared for by a professional archival staff and made available to all as historical records.

REV_00125650

The handling of presidential materials began to change again with President Nixon's resignation in 1974. Congress enacted the Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act (PRMPA) to ensure that no evidence in President Nixon's papers, tapes, or other historical material relating to Watergate would be destroyed. The PRMPA seized the Nixon presidential materials and gave the National Archives and Records Service, now NARA, legal custody and control over them.

Historians, journalists, and Congress now raised serious questions about the ownership of Presidential materials suggesting instead they be treated as government records. PRMPA had established the National Study Commission on Records and Documents of Federal Officials to explore topics of ownership, control, disposition, and preservation of historic materials. The report of the Commission, completed in March 1977, made two basic recommendations:

1. All documentary materials received or made by Federal Officials in discharge of their official duties should be considered the property of the United States.
2. Federal Officials should be given the prerogative to control access to their materials up to 15 years after the end of their federal service.

In 1978, Congress acted on the report and passed the Presidential Records Act (44 U.S.C. chapter 22). This Act created and defined a new category of records – Presidential records and established the terms of access to these records. The Act clearly established that these records are owned by the United States. After conclusion of a president's tenure, the custody of presidential records is transferred to the Archivist of the United States.

Government archivists and curators preserve, process, and provide access to the presidential materials in their care. The process for providing access to donated historical materials and the process for providing access to presidential records vary somewhat in implementation because of the statutory and regulatory requirements. However, the mission of the government staff in each

Library is the same – to preserve and process the materials and provide access as fully and promptly as the law or deed and resources permit.

Besides large collections of papers and records of the President and others associated with him, each presidential library also houses various artifacts and gifts given to the President. The latter include Head of State gifts under The Foreign Gifts and Decorations Act, 22 U.S.C. 264, and gifts received by the President from private citizens and accepted by him for eventual deposit in his presidential library (44 U.S.C. 2111 and 2112).

Many historians, educators, and other users have offered their testimonials on the value of presidential libraries and the dedicated staff that preserve, process, and assist them in using the materials. Countless forwards to well-known historical works over the past fifty years refer to the importance of these materials for exploring and understanding historical themes and issues of our time. In a recent Washington Times article (2/28/00), the reporter noted that "As far as scholars, educators and the U.S. government are concerned, the libraries are among the most important research sites in the United States." In the same article, Page Miller, former director of the National Coordinating Committee for the Promotion of History, is quoted saying, "All you have to do is check the footnotes of major prize-winning books and monographs dealing with presidents and you'll see they all reference presidential libraries." Anna Nelson, a long-time user of archives, has found that "in all these presidential libraries the archivists are splendid," a view widely shared by professionals who use the libraries.

The materials in presidential libraries are among this Nation's most important documents. Presidential records are often open for research long before the records of other departments and agencies of government are even transferred to the National Archives. Political scientists study the processes used by Presidents to govern and make recommendations to new Presidents on what works and does not work. Economists study the impact of presidential decisions on economic indicators and project what will happen in the future. The media searches for examples from our past to inform the public about current events. Hundreds of thousands of children visit libraries each year to learn about how President's make decisions, how laws are passed, how wars were fought, how our civil rights have been ensured, and how people lived before they were born. And over a million visitors each year view the human drama of the presidency through the power of objects and documents displayed in the libraries.

PRESIDENTIAL LIBRARY FOUNDATIONS

Presidents have a vision for their libraries that goes beyond building a bricks and mortar building and caring for their records. This may be providing a premier institution to support educational institutions at all levels or promoting public service or providing forums for the exploration of the important issues of our day. Whatever their larger vision has been, former Presidents and their families know that a lively, exciting institution that draws a large visitorship from their community and from the nation, and an institution that provides an informative program of exhibits, public, and educational events must have an active and generous foundation. The government cannot be expected to provide appropriated funds to each presidential library for these purposes. The library foundations have evolved to meet these needs. The contributions of these support organizations to the libraries spells the difference between static repositories and lively, vital centers of scholarship and service to the public.

In 1973, James B. Rhoads, then Archivist of the United States, told an education symposium at the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library, "Presidential libraries would be fulfilling their purpose if they did nothing more than preserve and provide access to the papers they contain...but their charters are broad and their possibilities for service are unlimited." However broad their charters may be, the libraries face limitations imposed by financial reality. Taxpayers are under no obligation to fund a temporary exhibit on the Civil War, a conference on civil rights, or educational efforts aimed at high school students, admirable and useful as these undeniably are to the public. These efforts are funded by the libraries' support organizations and can constitute as much as one-third of the support in those libraries with highly active public and outreach programs.

Directly appropriated funds pay for activities mandated by law as part of NARA's mission. These include appraisal, accessioning, processing, and preserving of materials held in the libraries, as well as the promotion of their usage by researchers. NARA must also provide for security, facility maintenance, and environmental and safety controls. NARA pays salaries for administrators, archivists, archives specialists, curators, registrars, librarians, facility managers, education specialists, technicians, and clerks. The Trust Fund of each library provides admission clerks, exhibit specialists, audiovisual specialists, visitor services staff, and volunteer coordinators. Foundations in many of the libraries provide additional staff to support educational activities and Internet accesses.

As existing buildings became cramped and obsolete, many Foundations have supported efforts to update and expand Library buildings by providing funds for expanding exhibit and educational programs. Public funds to expand spaces in libraries have often been contingent on the ability of the foundations to raise additional private funds to support the program functions in these expanded spaces.

In summary, the libraries and their support organizations have demonstrated a commitment to public service and have displayed an entrepreneurial willingness to rely upon financial sources other than the American taxpayer.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes my prepared remarks. I would be happy to answer any questions at the appropriate time.

Kate,

The Mail Analysis (MA) of the Presidential Correspondence Office uses two facsimiles to receive faxes addressed to the President. These two facsimiles run around the clock and generate lots of paper (and burn trees too). MA likes to install a Fax Server that will allow them to receive faxes electronically. All incoming faxes will be saved as images and can be printed on demand. The question is: does the Fax Server meet the ARMS requirements? If not, what should we do to make the Fax Server ARMS compliant?

Thanks,

Please find attached the latest "By the Numbers," which shows the President is shaping the tax cut debate and building strong support for his plan.

As always, I would appreciate it if you would pass this on to the appropriate members of your respective offices. Hard copies were distributed to Senior Staff this morning. Thank you - and if there is now a working distribution list for your group, please let me know, and I will use it next time.

President's Tax Cut Continues to Resonate

"One thing is crystal clear in this week's…poll: Americans are thinking about tax cuts. Whether the focus is congressional agendas or…the federal budget surplus, taxes are a priority."
-Fox News Poll Analysis

SUMMARY

- According to a new Fox News/Opinion Dynamics survey, the public believes the most important issue for the federal government to address is taxes. Since January, the tax issue has risen almost 20%, from fifth to first on the list.
- When asked how the surplus should be spent, the most popular response was "tax cuts."
- Support for the President's tax plan remains strong at 55%, unchanged from the past two Fox surveys.
- Americans overwhelmingly believe a reduction in long-term overall tax rates (70%) is more important than an immediate rebate (21%).
- 8 in 10 Americans describe a tax cut as a return of their own money rather than government taking money away from other things to give to them.

Fox News/Opinion Dynamics Poll, 3/28-29/01 (n=905 RVs)

What do you think are the two most important issues for the federal government to address? (Open Ended)

	Now	Jan 12
Taxes	31%	13%
Education	29	32
Economy	18	19
Health Care	15	23

…the U.S. has a budget surplus. What do you think should be done with this money? (Open Ended)

Tax Cuts	28%
Reduce national debt	19
Increase spending on education	14
Strengthen Social Security/ Medicare/Prescription drugs	13

Based on what you know about it, do you favor or oppose President Bush's proposal for a $1.6 trillion dollar tax cut over the next 10 years?

	Now	Mar 16	Feb 9
Favor	55	55	54
Oppose	33	32	29

Which of the following do you think is more important:

An immediate tax rebate for taxpayers	21%
Reductions in long-term overall tax rates	70

Which of the following do you think better describes a tax refund:

Your own money being returned to you	79%
Government taking money from other things to give to you	12

OFFICE OF STRATEGIC INITIATIVES

"The ability to learn faster than your competitors may be your only sustainable competitive advantage."* Arie de Geus, former strategic planner for Royal Dutch Shell

April 3, 2001

Dear Friends,

You are invited to join me in attending the first of OSI,s new lecture series. These will be held periodically to help us to look over the horizon and anticipate change, keeping in touch with the latest insights, trends, and ideas. One way to accomplish this is talking with thinkers, writers, and scholars about what we can do to better plan for the future.

This week, a panel of presidential scholars will meet with commissioned officers yodiscuss lessons that can be learned from previous Presidents* What happens after the first 100 days? How can an administration keep the momentum going? What obstacles have presidents typically faced in their first year? It will be well worth your time. Here are the details:

WHAT: OSI presidential scholars panel

WHO: Jack Watson, former Chief of Staff to President Jimmy Carter Stephen Skowronek, author of &The Politics Presidents Make8
Fred Greenstein, author &The Presidential Difference8
Norm Ornstein, American Enterprise Institute

WHEN: Friday, April 6, 2:45pm

WHERE: Room 472 in the EEOB

Despite its name, this is not really a lecture series. Instead, it,s more of a give-and-take information session. The format of the event will be simple, with plenty of time for questions.

And if there are any non-commissioned staff that you think might benefit from the presentation, please contact OSI at 62108 and they will make accommodations based on a first come, space-available basis.

Due to limited seating, please don,t hesitate to immediately RSVP. I hope you will join me this Friday. You won,t want to miss it.

Sincerely,

Andy Card

I know that you are working on developing facts (including caseload statistics) to support filling the slate of vacancies in the 4th Circuit, and I wondered if you had tried inquiring at the AO of the US Courts. They have an entire division devoted to statistics regarding caseload (502-1001). You may decide that you don't want to go out of the WH to find such information. But I thought I should pass along the idea, in the event you hadn't thought of it.

Brett--

I've forwarded you the e-mail which was sent to me by an attorney in the Office of Government Ethics, which should include a link to 5 C.F.R. section 2635 as well as three advisory opinions in Word Perfect format. If you have trouble accessing the documents, just e-mail me back and I'll send them to you individually as Word documents.

My question to OGE was specific to events which would not be "fundraising" per se, i.e. the attendees would not be paying to attend and money would not be solicited from them at the event where a Cabinet official was attending or speaking.

For guidance on attendance/participation by Cabinet officials at political fundraising events, I've been using Advisory Opinion 93 X 19 (August 25, 1993).

Thanks for getting back to me.

Letter to the President of an Association dated January 24, 1990

This is in reply to your letter of December 27, 1989, in which you requested guidance relating to any ethical concerns arising from the unpaid participation of Federal employees as speakers, instructors, or panelists at luncheons and symposia sponsored by an association for which you serve as President. According to your letter, [the Association] is a "non-profit association of individuals from Government and the private sector with a common interest in [a certain area of government regulation]." You indicate that [the Association] sponsors luncheons and symposia for the purpose of advancing knowledge and understanding of [a topic]. [The Association] charges registrants a fee in order to cover the association's administrative costs. You wish to confirm your view that Federal ethics laws and regulations do not preclude Federal employees from serving as uncompensated speakers, instructors, and panelists at programs sponsored by [the Association] notwithstanding the fact that a registration fee may be charged.

There is nothing in the conflict of interest statutes or in the standards of conduct that prohibits an employee from serving in his personal capacity as a member of a nonprofit organization such as [the Association]. There are, however, appearance concerns that can arise under agency standards of conduct regulations implementing 5 C.F.R. § 735.201 when an active member of an organization participates in his official Government capacity in matters affecting the financial interests of that organization. These appearance concerns may dictate that an active member disqualify himself from participating in official

Government matters affecting the organization. Such a concern could arise, for example, where the organization has submitted comments on a proposed regulation that is being revised by the employee. [T]he basic conflict of interest statute, 18 U.S.C. § 208, treats the financial interests of an organization as the personal financial interests of its officers and directors [but does not do so for mere members]. Officers and directors of an organization are consequently prohibited by law from taking official Government action that would affect the organization's financial interests.

A Federal employee is free to participate in nonprofit organization programs as an uncompensated speaker, instructor, or panelist in his personal capacity, whether or not the organization is charging a fee for attendance. He must first comply with any agency-specific requirements for advance approval of outside teaching, lecturing, or writing. An employee may not use Government time, resources, or equipment to prepare his presentation in violation of 5 C.F.R. § 735.205 and may not release nonpublic information to further the interests of the organization in violation of section 735.206. Employees who participate must be careful that they do not use or permit the use of their official title, position, or authority to further the interests of the outside organization (or themselves). Thus, for example, the speaker, instructor, or panel participant at an [Association] function must make it clear that he is presenting his own views and that he is not representing his agency.

A Federal employee may also participate as an uncompensated speaker, instructor, or panelist at a luncheon or symposium when authorized to do so as a part of official duties, even though a registration fee is charged. The employee should not, however, be authorized to participate as a speaker where registration fees charged Government attendees are not in line with the actual costs of the program to the sponsor. In addition, the agency must find that it is in the interest of the agency for the employee to participate and that the event is an appropriate forum for the exchange of information relevant to the programs, operations, and responsibilities of the agency.[1] Thus, for example, an agency could reasonably find that it is in its best interests to authorize its expert on the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) to appear before [the Association] for the purpose of explaining the agency's implementation of the Act to a group of individuals who routinely deal in FOIA matters. Neither the participating employee nor the authorizing official will be deemed to have extended preferred treatment to the sponsoring organization so long as the agency had a reasonable basis for choosing the one forum over another.

[1](Ed. note: Subsequent advice from OGE to the Association clarified that this sentence sets forth the relevant standard and, further, that in determining whether an event is an "appropriate forum" within the meaning of the standard, an agency decisionmaker may consider all relevant factors, including whether the registration fees charged Government attendees are in line with the actual costs of the program to the sponsor.)

Letter to the Inspector General of a Quasi-Official Federal Entity dated July 15, 1994

This is in response to your letter of May 27, 1994, concerning a two-day conference on [a particular program]. As described in the brochure included with your letter, the conference is sponsored by an apparently private organization. The brochure states that those attending will "[b]enefit from the experiences of 10 government departments that have implemented [a particular program]." Over half of the listed speakers appear to be Federal Government officials, and marketing of the program is directed to Government executives. The cost of the two-day program is $995 for Government officials and $1,195 for private company executives.

Your letter states that [your entity] is considering establishing a code of conduct at [the entity] and requests information regarding regulations or other directives that relate to such conferences. As we understand the status of [the entity], it is generally not considered a department, agency, or instrumentality of the Federal Government, [citation deleted], and its employees are not, therefore, subject to the conflict of interest statutes or the administrative Standards of Ethical Conduct. Accordingly, as your letter suggests, our discussion below of the effect of the statutes and standards on executive branch employees is not directly relevant to [entity] employees but could serve as guidance or provide a starting point for developing your own code of conduct.

Since all the speakers at the conference appear to be speaking officially, we assume your primary concern relates to restrictions on employees' official participation in such a conference as speakers.[1] Under the conflict of interest statutes and the Standards of Conduct, speaking at a conference in an official capacity may raise conflict of interest issues if the speaker holds a director or officer position in, or is an active participant in, the organization sponsoring the conference. A criminal statute, 18 U.S.C. § 208, prohibits employees from participating personally and substantially in an official capacity in any particular matters in which organizations they serve as

[1]The analysis is somewhat different when an employee is asked to speak in his private capacity. In such a case, for example, the employee may not use Government time or Government property in preparing or giving his speech. 5 C.F.R. §§ 2635.704 and 2635.705. He may not use his Government position or title to suggest Government sanction or endorsement of his speech. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.702. As is the case with respect to official speech, the employee could not accept compensation for his speech if it is "related to his duties." 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807. If agency regulations require prior approval for outside activities, then whether the speech were for compensation or not, the speaking engagement would be subject to the prior approval by the agency. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.803.

officers or directors have a financial interest, unless they obtain a waiver as outlined in subsection 208(b). See also 5 C.F.R. § 2635.401 et seq. The administrative Standards of Conduct provide that, unless specifically authorized to participate, employees should not participate in matters to which organizations in which they are active participants are parties, if a reasonable person with knowledge of the relevant facts would question their impartiality. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.502.

Acceptance of compensation for the official speech would also present problems under the relevant statutes and standards. 18 U.S.C. § 209 prohibits employees from receiving from non-Government sources compensation for services as employees. Similarly, 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(A) prohibits acceptance of compensation from non-Government sources for teaching or speaking that "is undertaken as part of the employee's official duties." While "compensation," as defined in 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(iii), generally includes transportation, lodgings and meals, it does not include "[m]eals or other incidents of attendance such as waiver of attendance fees or course materials furnished as part of the event at which the . . . speaking takes place." 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(iii)(B). It also does not include items of little value which are intended for presentation purposes, like a plaque, or item under $20 in value as, for example, a ballpoint pen, food, or inexpensive meals even if not furnished as part of the event. See, e.g., 5 C.F.R. §§ 2635.807(a)(2)(iii)(A); 2635.203(b)(2); 2635.204(a).

Beyond issues related to individual employee conduct regulated by the conflict of interest statutes or the Standards of Conduct, your letter raises the policy question of whether agencies should provide speakers to privately-sponsored conferences, particularly where fees for attendance by Government employees are significant. This issue, beyond the jurisdiction of this office, is not addressed by our Standards of Conduct; nor are we aware of any statutes or regulations currently in effect that directly address the question.[2] In the process of authorizing an employee to speak officially at a conference, however, an agency necessarily would have to determine that it is in the Government's interest for the employee to participate and that the event is an appropriate forum for the exchange of information relevant to the programs, operations, or responsibilities of the agency. See The Informal Advisory Letters and Memoranda and Formal Opinions of the United States Office of Government Ethics, 90 x 1. In making this determination, an agency presumably would consider the cost of attendance as well as the extent of Federal participation in presentation of the program. If fees are substantial or out of proportion to costs, an agency might choose not to provide a speaker.[3] and Budget (OMB) issued guidelines for Government-sponsored attendance at conferences, which stated: "[s]peaking engagements should not be accepted for meetings where fees for Government employees are not in line with actual costs." Based on information obtained from OMB, we understand that this guideline was revoked in the early 1980s.

[3]Regarding the question of whether Government employees may attend a conference conducted by a private organization charging substantial attendance fees, we assume, similarly, that, in exercising its discretion to approve or disapprove attendance, an agency would and should properly consider whether the benefit to the agency of having the employee attend is worth the cost of the attendance fee.

OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT ETHICS

Letter to the Acting Deputy Director of an Agency dated August 31, 1998

This is in reply to your letter of July 9, 1998, in which you asked if there are any particular provisions in the Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Executive Branch (Standards of Conduct) issued by this Office at 5 C.F.R. part 2635, or if this Office has any advisory letters or memoranda, addressing two questions you have about Federal employees who serve as speakers at conferences or similar events sponsored by non-Federal entities. Your questions, and our answers to them, are set forth in turn below.

1. What standards should be used in evaluating the appropriateness of Government employees participating, either in their official or unofficial capacities, in non-Federally sponsored conferences, meetings, or symposia where a fee is charged for attendance?

As discussed below, the conflict of interest statutes and the Standards of Conduct apply differently in the context of speaking engagements, depending on whether the employee is participating in an official or unofficial capacity.

OFFICIAL PARTICIPATION

Section 208 of title 18, United States Code, prohibits an employee from participating personally and substantially in an official capacity in any particular matter affecting the financial interests of an organization in which the employee serves as an officer, director, or employee, unless he obtains a waiver under 18 U.S.C. § 208(b). Accordingly, when an employee serves an organization in such a capacity, section 208 may preclude the employee from serving as an official speaker at an event sponsored by the organization. Similarly, "appearances" might require an employee's disqualification from a speaking engagement under section 2635.502 of the Standards of Conduct. Unless specifically authorized to participate, section 2635.502 provides that an employee should not participate in certain assignments involving an organization in which he is an active participant, if a reasonable person with knowledge of the relevant facts would question his impartiality.

Other authorities prohibit an employee from accepting compensation for making an official speech. Section 209 of title 18, United States Code, prohibits an employee from receiving any salary or supplementation of salary "as compensation for his services as an officer or employee . . . ." Under section 209, therefore, an employee may not accept payment from a private organization for giving an official speech. Also, in this regard, the Standards of Conduct provide that an employee may not receive compensation (including travel expenses) from an outside source for speaking if the activity is undertaken as part of the employee's official duties. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(A). However, an employee speaking at a conference or other similar event may accept "[m]eals or other incidents of attendance such as waiver of attendance fees or course materials furnished as part of the event at which the . . . speaking takes place" as well as items of little monetary value, such as a commemorative plaque, a ballpoint pen, or an inexpensive meal even if not furnished as part of the event. 5 C.F.R. §§ 2635.807(a)(2)(iii)(A) and (B), 2635.203(b), and 2635.204(a). In addition, the Standards of Conduct would permit the employee to receive a tape of the speech or a similar item that provides a record of the activity. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(iii)(C).

The question of whether employees should be assigned to serve as speakers at conferences or similar events sponsored by non-Governmental entities, especially where the organizers are charging a significant fee, goes beyond the issues of individual employee conduct addressed in the Standards of Conduct and conflict of interest statutes.[1] Nevertheless, in

[1] The Director of the Office of Management and Budget issued guidelines in 1977 concerning Government-sponsored attendance at conferences stating that "[s]peaking engagements should not be accepted for meetings where fees for Government employees are not in line with actual costs." It is our understanding that this guidance was revoked in the early 1980s.

an informal advisory opinion we issued a few years ago, we suggested that in determining whether to authorize an employee to make an official presentation at a conference, "an agency necessarily would have to determine that it is in the Government's interest for the employee to participate and that the event is an appropriate forum for the exchange of information relevant to the programs, operations, or responsibilities of the agency." In making this determination, we suggested that an agency might consider a number of factors, including the cost of attendance and the extent of Federal participation in the event. OGE Informal Advisory Letter 94 x 14; see also OGE Informal Advisory Letter 90 x 1.

UNOFFICIAL PARTICIPATION

An employee engaged in any outside activity must comply with any prior approval requirement his agency may have in its regulations. Many agencies have such a regulatory requirement. Although the requirement varies from agency to agency, most of the agencies that require their employees to obtain prior approval include outside speaking among the activities for which prior approval must be obtained. At some agencies, for example, an employee must obtain prior approval for any outside speaking activity, whether or not for compensation, unless the activity is to be undertaken for a nonprofit charitable, religious, professional, social, fraternal, educational, recreational, public service, or civic organization and is to be done without compensation (other than reimbursement of expenses). See, e.g., the Supplemental Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, at 5 C.F.R. § 5101.103(c). At other agencies, an employee must obtain prior approval only if the outside speaking activity is to be done for an entity in a certain category and is to be for compensation. See, e.g., the Supplemental Standards of Ethical Conduct for Employees of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, at 5 C.F.R. § 5801.103. Moreover, some agencies may have policies requiring advance agency review, clearance, or approval of certain speeches to determine whether the speech contains an appropriate disclaimer and complies with the Standards of Conduct.

REV_00125738

Like an employee who speaks in his official capacity, an employee who engages in speaking as an outside activity must comply with restrictions relating to his acceptance of compensation. Although the statutory honoraria ban can no longer be enforced against any employee,[2] the Standards of Conduct continue to prohibit employees from receiving compensation, including travel expenses, for outside speaking that "relates to the employee's official duties." 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807. An activity can relate to an employee's official duties within the meaning of this prohibition even though it is undertaken in an employee's personal capacity. For most employees, speaking is considered related to duties if the subject of the activity deals in significant part with any matter to which the employee presently is assigned or to which the employee had been assigned during the previous one-year period, or any ongoing or announced policy, program or operation of the employee's agency. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(E)(1) and (2).[3] Speaking is also deemed related to duties if the invitation to speak was extended to the employee primarily because of his official position, rather than his expertise in the subject; if the invitation

[2] In National Treasury Employees Union v. United States, 413 U.S. 454 (1995), the Supreme Court found that the honoraria ban at 5 U.S.C. app. § 501(b) violated the First Amendment rights of persons on whose behalf the case was brought. The Department of Justice's Office of Legal Counsel subsequently concluded that the honoraria prohibition cannot be enforced against any employee, including employees of the legislative and judicial branches and high-level executive branch officials.

[3] Different standards apply to high-level noncareer employees and to part-time or intermittent "special Government employees" (SGEs). In the case of a high-level noncareer employee, the subject of a speech is considered related to the employee's duties if it deals in significant part with "the general subject matter area, industry, or economic sector primarily affected by the programs and operations of his agency." 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(E)(3). An SGE's speech is considered related to duties only if it deals in significant part with certain of his Government assignments. 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(E)(4).

or the offer of compensation was extended by a person or entity substantially affected by the performance of the employee's official duties; or if the speech is based substantially on nonpublic information. 5 C.F.R. §§ 2635.807(a)(2)(i)(B), (C), and (D). As already noted, the term "compensation" is defined for purposes of section 2635.807 as excluding commemorative plaques and other items or benefits of de minimis value.[4]

Some employees are subject to outside earned income limitations which may restrict the acceptance of payment for a speaking engagement, even if the speech is not related to duties within the meaning of 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807. Noncareer employees who occupy positions above GS-15 of the General Schedule are, by statute, subject to a 15-percent limitation on outside earned income. As described in 5 C.F.R. §

[4] In Sanjour v. United States, 56 F. 3d 85 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (en banc), the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit sustained a First Amendment challenge to a portion of 5 C.F.R. § 2635.807. Pending the district court's issuance of a final order in Sanjour, we have asked Designated Agency Ethics Officials not to enforce against employees (other than certain noncareer employees) the provision in the Standards of Conduct prohibiting the acceptance of travel expenses in connection with a speech that is related to the employee's duties solely because the subject of the speech deals in significant part with agency policies, programs, or operations.

Ed. Note: On remand in the Sanjour case, at 7 F. Supp.2d 14 (D.D.C. 1998), the district court ruled that the travel expenses prohibition in section 2635.807 of the Standards of Conduct is unconstitutional and cannot be enforced against employees "who work below the grade level of senior executive service." On November 25, 1998, OGE issued DAEOgram DO-98-034 that said there was not going to be any further appeal of the decision, and advised agencies to continue enforcement of the ban on travel expenses only against senior executive branch officials who are "covered noncareer employees" under 5 C.F.R. § 2636.303(a), pending the issuance of an amendment to the Standards of Conduct that would reflect this guidance.

2636.304(a), an employee subject to the limitation "may not, in any calendar year, receive outside earned income attributable to that calendar year which exceeds 15 percent of the annual rate of basic pay for level II of the Executive Schedule . . . ." "Outside earned income" is defined in 5 C.F.R. § 2636.303(b) to mean "wages, salaries, honoraria, commissions, professional fees and any other form of compensation," subject to several regulatory exceptions. Separately, section 102 of Executive Order 12674 prohibits certain Presidential appointees, including all Executive Schedule officials, from receiving any outside earned income for any outside activity performed during their appointments.

Apart from observing the restrictions relating to the acceptance of compensation, an employee who speaks in his personal capacity must comply with provisions in subpart G of the Standards of Conduct requiring that he not misuse the Government's property, nonpublic information, or time (including the time of a subordinate). And, as discussed more fully below, he may not use his official title or position in connection with his outside speaking except as permitted by section 2635.807(b).[5]

2. May employees use their Government title, agency stationery or other Government resources to advertise or advocate attendance at non-Federally sponsored conferences, meetings, or symposia where a fee is charged for attendance?

Section 2635.702(b) of the Standards of Conduct prohibits any employee from using or permitting the use of his Government title or position in a manner that would

[5] Of course, when an employee is authorized by his agency to speak in his official capacity, the provisions of the Standards of Conduct concerning an employee's use of official title and agency resources in connection with the preparation and delivery of a speech are not applicable. When an employee makes a speech in his official capacity, it is expected that he will prepare it using Government time and resources and that he will be identified by reference to his Government title. It is also expected that the sponsor of a forum may refer to an employee's Government title in connection with the promotion of the speech.

reasonably be construed to imply that the Government or his agency endorses his personal activities or those of another. Section 2635.702(c) states that an employee may not use or permit the use of his Government title or position to endorse any product, service, or enterprise.[6] Applying these concepts in the context of unofficial speech, section 2635.807(b) prohibits an employee who engages in speaking as an outside activity from using or permitting the use of his official title or position in connection with that activity, either for purposes of identification or as a means of promoting his activity. An exception at section 2635.807(b)(1), however, provides that an employee may use or permit the use of his title or position in connection with his speaking when it is used for purposes of identification, provided it is included as one of several biographical details. His title or position may be given no more prominence than other significant biographical details. Allowing the listing of the employee's current position only as one of several biographical facts permits important information about the speaker to be revealed in a manner that does not suggest Governmental sanction of the speech or conference.

Under section 2635.704(a) of the Standards of Conduct, an employee may not use or permit the use of Government property "for other than authorized purposes." Section 2635.704(b)(2) explains that use of Federal property is "authorized" when the use is for those purposes for which Government property is made available to the public or for purposes authorized in accordance with law or regulation, such as the Federal Property Management regulations issued by the General Services Administration.[7] Notably, as recognized

[6] There are circumstances where an employee, acting in an official capacity, may properly endorse a product, service, or enterprise. See 5 C.F.R. § 2635.702(c)(1) and (2). In example 2 following section 2635.702 of the Standards of Conduct, for example, a Foreign Commercial Service officer meeting with representatives from the Government of Spain could explain the advantages of procurement from a particular U.S. company.

[7] Section 2635.704 of the Standards of Conduct implements the principle in Executive Order 12674 that "[e]mployees in regulations promulgated by the Office of Personnel Management at 5 C.F.R. part 251, an agency may provide support services to certain organizations, including professional associations, when the agency determines that "such action would benefit the agency's programs or would be warranted as a service to employees who are members of the organization . . . ." 5 C.F.R. § 251.202. By way of example, the regulation suggests that an agency might authorize an employee to use agency equipment or administrative support to prepare a paper to be presented at a conference. This is an agency authority, however, and would require the agency to determine the extent of support to be extended to any particular organization.

Finally, your letter enclosed a brochure advertising a conference to be held in September (September conference). It appears that several current executive branch employees are scheduled to speak at that conference. We cannot determine from the brochure, however, whether these employees will be addressing the conference in their official or private capacities. When an employee's participation in an event comes to our attention by means of a brochure or other advertisement, we typically forward the advertisement to the cognizant Inspector General for investigation or other appropriate action. Consistent with this practice, we are forwarding a copy of the September conference brochure to the Inspector General's office (or equivalent investigatory office) at each agency employing one of the Federal employees advertised as a speaker. Once the facts are known, each agency will then be in a position to decide if its employee engaged in activity contrary to law or regulation.[8] Since we understand that the September conference is merely shall protect and conserve Federal property and shall not use it for other than authorized activities." OGE does not have authority to create exceptions permitting the use of Government property otherwise falling within the general prohibition in the Executive order.

[8] In the case of the September conference, some of the conduct potentially violative of the Standards of Conduct or conflict of interest laws has yet to occur and might, therefore, be prevented. We will emphasize this fact in our forwarding letters.

representative of your concerns, we have not sought to clarify the role of the Federal participants at that particular conference for purposes of our discussion of applicable law.

I trust the foregoing summary of applicable laws and regulations will prove useful.

Sincerely,

Stephen D. Potts

I called Heather yesterday afternoon asking for the status (around 5:00 p.m.) and she said that he hadn't had a chance to look at it yet but that I should distribute it if the attorneys had signed off on the agenda and everything matched up in the book because Tim doesn't make changes to the agenda.

Do I need to make changes?

This is from Q & A after POTUS' remarks today to the American Society of Newspaper Editors Convention:

Q I was wondering if, in the spirit of civility and conciliation you were talking about, whether you think that when it comes to appointing members to the federal bench, and especially if there are vacancies to the Supreme Court, that you should try, before appointments are made, to engage in a bipartisan conversation with Democrats in the United States Senate who have already indicated that they might be taking a very hard line if they believe you're sending up nominees that are philosophically extreme? Or do you feel that you are like any other President, and should operate on the principle of you propose and let them dispose?

THE PRESIDENT: The latter. We're going to pick the most qualified people we can find, people that share my philosophy about strict constructionism on the Court. I'll be mindful of confirmation. I don't particularly want a big fight in the Senate. And so we'll be putting out -- we'll be gathering intelligence as to whether or not a person can be confirmed or not. I made decide to send somebody up that will create a tough fight. I don't know. I haven't gotten there yet.

But of course, I pick somebody I want them to get confirmed. And so we'll be mindful of that. Obviously I've made a lot of other -- another decision about whether or not we ought to have screening agencies or screening groups, people to screen our people, and I decided not to do that. We'll get a lot of opinions, and not one opinion is more important than another, as far as my administration's concerned. And so we'll pick the people, and the Senate can hopefully confirm them.

CA6 has stayed pending appeal the Michigan district court ruling striking down the Michigan Law School's race-based admissions program.
The panel on the stay order consisted of 2 Clinton appointees (Daughtrey and Moore) and a Carter appointee, Boyce Martin. If this panel stays intact for the appeal itself, that almost certainly will mean the law school's race-based admissions program will be upheld by the CA6 panel, although there is the possibility of en banc review, especially given that there is another CA6 case pending on the college admissions program at Michigan.

The panel in its stay order specifically stated that the correctness of the district court's decision rests on the proper interpretation of the Supreme Court's decision in Bakke.

I should add that Ted ably and quickly recovered by saying how much he enjoyed his time waiting for Senator Specter, as it was truly an interesting and fascinating experience just to be there, outside the Senate chamber, to witness the comings and goings.

Subject: Nominations Presented to the Senate

After the Congressional recess, I expect that we will be receiving requests from a number of Senate committee members to see the summaries of FBI investigations of nominees. As a result of this, most likely I will be asking you to go to the Hill much more frequently to visit Senators regarding the nominations. With that in mind, here is a brief overview of how this process works, given some questions that a couple of you have raised with me.

Only the ranking majority and ranking minority Senator of the committee holding the nomination hearing for a candidate are entitled to see the summary of the FBI investigation for the candidate.
Only the Senator may review the summary of the FBI investigation. No staff may see the summary and it may not be copied by the Senator or his/her office. Most Senators and their staffs are aware of this rule, but occasionally they may ask you if someone else can see the file.
You should review the summary before you meet with a Senator. You may be asked questions about the summary and while you will most likely not be able to answer questions not obvious beyond the face of the document, if the Senator has questions that need to be followed up either by our office or the FBI it helps if you know the context of the question in relation to the summary so we can do appropriate further investigation.
Some summaries include the marking "(U)" after many paragraphs. Occasionally, a Senator will ask what this means. The"(U)" indicates that this portion of the summary is unclassified material. The "(U)" marking only occurs in files where classified information, such as top secret information, is contained. The "(U)" marking will not occur in most files as most do not contain top secret information.
I will let you know the Senator, the office number, and the contact person for the summary you are taking to the Hill. Often, you are asked to go to the Senator's office, and then an aide may take you to a committee room or close to the Senate floor where the Senator has a few minutes to review the summary.
The time you may need to spend with a Senator and a summary varies. It depends on the length of the summary and the Senator's depth of review. Sometimes the Senator is not immediately available at the time you are scheduled to go to his/her office, due to a vote that comes up or something else. You should expect to wait a reasonable amount of time if this occurs. However, if the delay is extensive, just ask the contact person if we can reschedule some other time with the Senator. Please also let me know if you are kept waiting repeatedly after several visits with a summary, or if the Senator or his/her office is unreasonable in any way.
Since the summaries are sensitive material, if you pick them up from me some time before going to the Hill please don't leave them alone in your office unless they are kept in a safe. Please also return the summaries to me as soon as you return from the Hill.

HEADLINE: Speedy Gonzales: Bush's fast-rising counsel

BYLINE: By Ramesh Ponnuru

BODY:
It's widely recognized that the Bush administration has more Reaganites in it than the Reagan administration itself had. Nowhere is this more true than in the administration's legal team. Never have a Justice Department and a White House counsel's office had more lawyers committed to a conservative view of the proper role of judges. It's a talented and well-credentialed crew, too. But it is also operating under severe political constraints. So it remains in doubt whether the administration will nominate a conservative for the Supreme Court when it has a chance.
The fact that White House counsel Alberto Gonzales tops most people's lists of likely nominees does nothing to resolve the mystery.

Gonzales was raised, with seven siblings, in a two-bedroom house in Houston. His mother had a sixth-grade education, four grades better than his father. After high school, he went to the Air Force Academy. While there, he decided he wanted to be a lawyer. He finished college at Rice, then went to Harvard Law. He became a corporate lawyer at a prestigious Houston firm. In 1995, George W. Bush, just elected governor, made Gonzales his counsel. Appointing Gonzales to office seems to have become a habit for Bush: He has since served as the secretary of state for Texas, a justice on the Texas supreme court, and now White House counsel. As Bush has said, "In many ways, Al embodies the American dream."

When Gonzales took his latest job, conservative lawyers in Washington were wary, even suspicious. Partly this was because he was not part of their inbred world. But Gonzales also had more of a reputation as a Bush loyalist than as a conservative. During his short time on the bench, he was considered a relative moderate-relative, that is, to Texas legal politics-and some of his votes deeply angered pro-lifers.

But Gonzales has moved quickly and effectively to allay conservatives' concerns. First, he staffed his office with highly regarded conservatives, including former clerks to Clarence Thomas and former aides to Kenneth Starr. He picked Timothy Flanagan, a conservative and Justice Department veteran, as his deputy. "This is the most overqualified White House counsel's office in history," says one conservative observer, who has consequently "gone 180" about Gonzales.

The administration has appointed conservatives to the Justice Department, too. Attorney general John Ashcroft is conversant with, and supportive of, conservative legal theories.
Ted Olson, a member of the conservative intelligentsia, will be solicitor general; John Manning, a former Scalia clerk, will head the office of legal counsel (OLC).

A further Gonzales move has also gone a long way to dispel doubts about him: ending the American Bar Association's official role in judicial nominations. The ABA will still weigh in on nominations once they are sent to the Senate. But the administration has sent an important signal that it will not kowtow to the liberal legal establishment. Gonzales won high marks for sending the ABA a tough but civil letter informing it of the decision. And he did it even though there were risks to him: Presumably the ABA will remember this episode if he is nominated to the federal bench.

Gonzales's office has been working fast on judicial picks. The administration will probably announce several nominees in late April. Conservatives are going to be elated by them.
University of Utah professor Michael McConnell, a leading critic of strict-separationist dogma on church-state relations, may get a position on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. It's been reported that conservative congressman Chris Cox will be appointed to the Ninth Circuit.
Federalist Society favorites such as Jeff Sutton and Peter Keisler are being talked up (for the Sixth and Fourth Circuits, respectively).

The high quality of this first round of judges reflects how much the supply of conservative lawyers has expanded over the last two decades. But it also reflects a careful and determined effort by the counsel's office. Early on, it gave senators the word that they would not be playing a large role in the selection of appeals-court judges: Appointments were going to be made to change the judiciary, not to dispense favors.

The White House also avoided the "stealth candidate" strategy that had produced the Supreme Court nomination of David Souter in the administration of Bush's father. Souter was picked because he wasn't vulnerable to criticism: Nobody knew what his judicial philosophy was. He ended up becoming one of the most liberal members of the Court. This time, the judge-pickers are looking for evidence that the people they plan to nominate share their general views. Being a member of the Federalist Society, or having a conservative track record as a judge, helps. So does being a woman or a black or Hispanic person-although philosophy and talent are considered more important. Finally, the administration is looking for youth: It wants to nominate people in their 40s, who will be on the bench for a while.

But no matter how stellar Bush's nominees are, confirming them is going to be difficult. Bush's administration may be more conservative than Reagan's, but the Senate he's dealing with is less so. The southern Democrats who voted for Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas are long gone, and their counterparts today are more prone to vote with their party. Northeastern Republicans, meanwhile, will not necessarily vote for conservative nominees.

Most Republicans expect at least one big judicial-nomination fight this year. If Chief Justice William Rehnquist or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor steps down-and speculation about whether one or the other will is at a boil right now-the abortion-rights and civil-rights activists are bound to mobilize against any replacement. As the vote on Ashcroft's nomination showed, the activists will bring most of the Democrats with them. If there is no vacancy on the high court, they'll find an appeals-court nomination to go ballistic over. They need an emotional battle with the administration to keep their troops happy and their donations coming. In this charged environment, getting a conservative with a paper trail on the Supreme Court is going to be very hard.

Hence the appeal of nominating Gonzales, who doesn't have much of a paper trail. Clint Bolick, a libertarian legal activist, says that his public-interest law firm, the Institute for Justice, has "looked at his judicial record fairly carefully, as I'm sure other groups have done." He continues, "Unfortunately, the range of issues dealt with by the Texas supreme court is very narrow. Justice Gonzales seemed to have positions that were sympathetic to business interests and that seemed to be relatively conservative, but there's just not a big record there."

For social conservatives, the black marks against Gonzales are his votes last year on a series of abortion cases. After years of debate, Texas had passed a law requiring parents to be notified if minors were procuring abortions. As in most such laws, there was a provision allowing a judge to override this requirement if, for example, it would subject the girl involved to abuse. In its first cases under the law, the Texas Supreme Court-with Gonzales in the majority-interpreted this judicial-bypass provision broadly. So broadly, according to one furious dissenting justice, that the law itself was gutted.

The dissenters made a strong case that the court's reading of the law was far-fetched. In Gonzales's defense, however, it should be noted that their predictions have not been borne out: Judicial bypasses have been rare. More important, the notification cases were so limited in their focus (and so messy) that they don't shed much light on Gonzales's views of abortion generally or of its constitutional status.

If he nominates Gonzales, Bush will be following his father's strategy on Supreme Court nominees. Like Clarence Thomas, Gonzales is a member of a minority group who climbed up from poverty. It is a melancholy fact that no principled conservative justice has been confirmed in 30 years without the benefit of affirmative action. (People often forget that Antonin Scalia was the first Italian-American nominee. Mario Cuomo endorsed him, and the Senate voted 98-0 to confirm him.)

Bush would also be following what might be called the Cheney precedent. Bush evidently concluded that a man he could trust to vet his potential running mates was trustworthy enough to be his running mate. Will he reach the same conclusion about the man he's put in charge of vetting his potential Supreme Court nominees? And then, of course, there is the precedent of Gonzales himself: He's been Bush's counsel, and then his judicial nominee, before.

Gonzales is by no means a sure thing as a nominee. Bush might decide to go with someone with more judicial experience. And Gonzales has told reporters that he's not interested in joining the Court. But a lot of people still think he's going to be Bush's first Court nominee.
The administration may have a legal dream team working for it, but conservatives have reason to be nervous.

HEADLINE: Speedy Gonzales: Bush's fast-rising counsel

BODY:
It's widely recognized that the Bush administration has more Reaganites in it than the Reagan administration itself had. Nowhere is this more true than in the administration's legal team. Never have a Justice Department and a White House counsel's office had more lawyers committed to a conservative view of the proper role of judges. It's a talented and well-credentialed crew, too. But it is also operating under severe political constraints. So it remains in doubt whether the administration will nominate a conservative for the Supreme Court when it has a chance.
The fact that White House counsel Alberto Gonzales tops most people's lists of likely nominees does nothing to resolve the mystery.

Gonzales was raised, with seven siblings, in a two-bedroom house in Houston. His mother had a sixth-grade education, four grades better than his father. After high school, he went to the Air Force Academy. While there, he decided he wanted to be a lawyer. He finished college at Rice, then went to Harvard Law. He became a corporate lawyer at a prestigious Houston firm. In 1995, George W. Bush, just elected governor, made Gonzales his counsel. Appointing Gonzales to office seems to have become a habit for Bush: He has since served as the secretary of state for Texas, a justice on the Texas supreme court, and now White House counsel. As Bush has said, "In many ways, Al embodies the American dream."

When Gonzales took his latest job, conservative lawyers in Washington were wary, even suspicious. Partly this was because he was not part of their inbred world. But Gonzales also had more of a reputation as a Bush loyalist than as a conservative. During his short time on the bench, he was considered a relative moderate-relative, that is, to Texas legal politics-and some of his votes deeply angered pro-lifers.

But Gonzales has moved quickly and effectively to allay conservatives' concerns. First, he staffed his office with highly regarded conservatives, including former clerks to Clarence Thomas and former aides to Kenneth Starr. He picked Timothy Flanagan, a conservative and Justice Department veteran, as his deputy. "This is the most overqualified White House counsel's office in history," says one conservative observer, who has consequently "gone 180" about Gonzales.

The administration has appointed conservatives to the Justice Department, too. Attorney general John Ashcroft is conversant with, and supportive of, conservative legal theories. Ted Olson, a member of the conservative intelligentsia, will be solicitor general; John Manning, a former Scalia clerk, will head the office of legal counsel (OLC).

A further Gonzales move has also gone a long way to dispel doubts about him: ending the American Bar Association's official role in judicial nominations. The ABA will still weigh in on nominations once they are sent to the Senate. But the administration has sent an important signal that it will not kowtow to the liberal legal establishment. Gonzales won high marks for sending the ABA a tough but civil letter informing it of the decision. And he did it even though there were risks to him: Presumably the ABA will remember this episode if he is nominated to the federal bench.

Gonzales's office has been working fast on judicial picks. The administration will probably announce several nominees in late April. Conservatives are going to be elated by them. University of Utah professor Michael McConnell, a leading critic of strict-separationist dogma on church-state relations, may get a position on the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals. It's been reported that conservative congressman Chris Cox will be appointed to the Ninth Circuit. Federalist Society favorites such as Jeff Sutton and Peter Keisler are being talked up (for the Sixth and Fourth Circuits, respectively).

The high quality of this first round of judges reflects how much the supply of conservative lawyers has expanded over the last two decades. But it also reflects a careful and determined effort by the counsel's office. Early on, it gave senators the word that they would not be playing a large role in the selection of appeals-court judges: Appointments were going to be made to change the judiciary, not to dispense favors.

The White House also avoided the "stealth candidate" strategy that had produced the Supreme Court nomination of David Souter in the administration of Bush's father. Souter was picked because he wasn't vulnerable to criticism: Nobody knew what his judicial philosophy was. He ended up becoming one of the most liberal members of the Court. This time, the judge-pickers are looking for evidence that the people they plan to nominate share their general views. Being a member of the Federalist Society, or having a conservative track record as a judge, helps. So does being a woman or a black or Hispanic person-although philosophy and talent are considered more important. Finally, the administration is looking for youth: It wants to nominate people in their 40s, who will be on the bench for a while.

But no matter how stellar Bush's nominees are, confirming them is going to be difficult. Bush's administration may be more conservative than Reagan's, but the Senate he's dealing with is less so. The southern Democrats who voted for Robert Bork and Clarence Thomas are long gone, and their counterparts today are more prone to vote with their party. Northeastern Republicans, meanwhile, will not necessarily vote for conservative nominees.

Most Republicans expect at least one big judicial-nomination fight this year. If Chief Justice William Rehnquist or Justice Sandra Day O'Connor steps down-and speculation about whether one or the other will is at a boil right now-the abortion-rights and civil-rights activists are bound to mobilize against any replacement. As the vote on Ashcroft's nomination showed, the activists will bring most of the Democrats with them. If there is no vacancy on the high court, they'll find an appeals-court nomination to go ballistic over. They need an emotional battle with the administration to keep their troops happy and their donations coming. In this charged environment, getting a conservative with a paper trail on the Supreme Court is going to be very hard.

Hence the appeal of nominating Gonzales, who doesn't have much of a paper trail. Clint Bolick, a libertarian legal activist, says that his public-interest law firm, the Institute for Justice, has "looked at his judicial record fairly carefully, as I'm sure other groups have done." He continues, "Unfortunately, the range of issues dealt with by the Texas supreme court is very narrow. Justice Gonzales seemed to have positions that were sympathetic to business interests and that seemed to be relatively conservative, but there's just not a big record there."

For social conservatives, the black marks against Gonzales are his votes last year on a series of abortion cases. After years of debate, Texas had passed a law requiring parents to be notified if minors were procuring abortions. As in most such laws, there was a provision allowing a judge to override this requirement if, for example, it would subject the girl involved to abuse. In its first cases under the law, the Texas Supreme Court-with Gonzales in the majority-interpreted this judicial-bypass provision broadly. So broadly, according to one furious dissenting justice, that the law itself was gutted.

The dissenters made a strong case that the court's reading of the law was far-fetched. In Gonzales's defense, however, it should be noted that their predictions have not been borne out: Judicial bypasses have been rare. More important, the notification cases were so limited in their focus (and so messy) that they don't shed much light on Gonzales's views of abortion generally or of its constitutional status.

If he nominates Gonzales, Bush will be following his father's strategy on Supreme Court nominees. Like Clarence Thomas, Gonzales is a member of a minority group who climbed up from poverty. It is a melancholy fact that no principled conservative justice has been confirmed in 30 years without the benefit of affirmative action. (People often forget that Antonin Scalia was the first Italian-American nominee. Mario Cuomo endorsed him, and the Senate voted 98-0 to confirm him.)

Bush would also be following what might be called the Cheney precedent. Bush evidently concluded that a man he could trust to vet his potential running mates was trustworthy enough to be his running mate. Will he reach the same conclusion about the man he's put in charge of vetting his potential Supreme Court nominees? And then, of course, there is the precedent of Gonzales himself: He's been Bush's counsel, and then his judicial nominee, before.

Gonzales is by no means a sure thing as a nominee. Bush might decide to go with someone with more judicial experience. And Gonzales has told reporters that he's not interested in joining the Court. But a lot of people still think he's going to be Bush's first Court nominee.
The administration may have a legal dream team working for it, but conservatives have reason to be nervous.

This message amends the Administrative Alert circulated yesterday regarding parking on Monday, April 16. Notwithstanding the fact that E Street will be closed beginning at 6:00AM on Monday morning, State Place permit holders will be allowed special access onto E Street for entry onto State Place until 8:00AM. After that time, please use alternate parking. Thank you.

Dear_____:

On behalf of the President, I wish to acknowledge and thank you for your kind invitation to _____.

The President is pleased to accept. Your event has been entered on the President's schedule for (date) (time).

Enclosed, please find helpful information with regard to your event. A member of the White House Staff will contact you in the near future to work out additional details and to answer any questions you may have.

Sincerely,

Bradley A. Blakeman
Deputy Assistant to the President for Appointments and Scheduling

MEMORANDUM FOR PRESIDENTIAL EVENT HOSTS

FROM BRADLEY A. BLAKEMAN DEPUTY ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT FOR APPOINTMENTS AND SCHEDULING

SUBJECT RESPONSIBILITIES OF HOST ORGANIZATIONS FOR PRESIDENTIAL VISITS

The President appreciates the opportunity to participate in your event and looks forward to being with you. The following represents the general responsibilities for organizations hosting the President. I know you will find this information helpful in planning your event.

It is imperative that the President's acceptance of your invitation NOT be announced to anyone until our office informs you that it is permissible to do so. Premature publicity could prevent the President's participation. Our Press Office will officially announce the President's participation at the proper time. Any public announcements regarding the President's participation by your organization must be coordinated with our Press Office.

If you should wish to make any substantive changes to the character, structure, location, timing or participants of your event, please contact my office as soon as possible as such changes will necessitate a reconsideration of the President's participation.

You should also be aware that a Presidential visit may require rather extensive staging and audio visual needs as well as certain staff office and press support requirements. The costs associated with these requirements are generally the responsibility of the host and are summarized on the attached list. If you are unable or unwilling to provide the items set forth on the annexed attachment, please contact my office within seven (7) days from the date of this letter.

As the event approaches, the White House will assign a Project Officer and an Advance Team for your event. The Advance Team will coordinate the logistics of the President's visit. The Lead Advance person will be directly responsible for all facets of the President's participation. The Lead Advance person will work with your organization on a daily basis leading up to the event day and will be present on-site with the President on the day of your event.

The White House Project Officer will be responsible for coordinating the substantive aspects of the visit, including the preparation of suitable briefing materials and remarks for the President.

3/29/2001 1:59 PM

You should be aware that a Presidential visit requires coordination with numerous law enforcement agencies, including the United States Secret Service. We must be sensitive and responsive to their needs.

Thank you so much for your hospitality. Should you have any questions regarding your invitation, please feel free to contact _____, the Project Officer for this event, at (202) 456-xxxx.

3/29/2001 1:59 PM

HOST FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITIES FOR PRESIDENTIAL APPEARANCES

The following items are necessary to establish the proper environment and physical character for a Presidential appearance, and are the responsibility of the host organization.

While not all-inclusive, this list provides a general overview of host responsibilities. Specific physical and management requirements will be determined by the nature of the event and the place which has been selected for the visit. Understandably, costs differ from city to city.

HOST RESPONSIBILITIES:

- FACILITY (EVENT LOCATION)
- STAGING PLATFORMS
- APPROPRIATE BACKDROP
- DAIS AND/OR HEAD TABLE
- SKIRTING OF THE ABOVE
- ROPE AND STANCHION, OR OTHER APPROPRIATE CONTAINMENT BARRIERS
- PRESS PLATFORMS
- PRESS FILING CENTER ADJACENT TO EVENT SITE
- TABLES/CHAIRS FOR WRITING PRESS
- TELEVISION QUALITY LIGHTING FOR THE EVENT
- INDUSTRY STANDARD PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEM WITH MULT BOXES
- TICKETS AND PROGRAMS
- ADVERTISING
- USHERS AND FACILITY SET-UP PERSONNEL
- EXPENSES OF THE ADVANCE STAFF OFFICE, GENERALLY NOT TO EXCEED, $1,000.00.
- MOTORCADE VEHICLES: (3) 15 PASSENGER VANS, (2) 7 PASSENGER VANS, (1) FULL SIZE SEDAN. ALL VEHICLES MUST BE AMERICAN MADE.
- (8) MOTORCADE DRIVERS, (WILL NEED NAMES, DATES OF BIRTH, AND SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS).
- (6) STAFF/PRESS ASSISTANTS AND VOLUNTEERS TO ASSIST ADVANCE TEAM WITH STAFF OFFICE DUTIES, PRESS CHECK IN, ETC. (WILL NEED NAMES, DATES OF BIRTH, AND SOCIAL SECURITY NUMBERS).
- SPECIAL NEEDS:
    - ACCESSIBILITY AND HANDICAPPED VIEWING.
    - A SIGN LANGUAGE INTERPRETER IS MANDATORY FOR ALL EVENTS WITH ATTENDEES OF MORE THAN 250. FOR EVENTS WITH 250 PERSONS OR LESS, A SIGN LANGUAGE INTERPRETER IS REQUIRED UNLESS THE HOST INDICATES IN WRITING TO THE LEAD ADVANCE REPRESENTATIVE THAT NO ATTENDEES WILL REQUIRE SUCH INTERPRETER.

3/29/2001 1:59 PM

The White House will provide the Presidential Podium, and technical supervision of all staging, lighting and sound requirements.

If you have any questions or concerns, please contact the office of Presidential Appointments and Scheduling at (202) 456-2514.

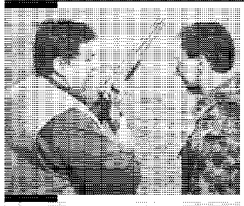
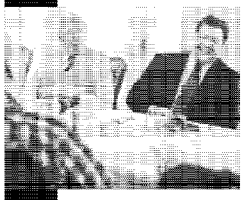
What Conservative Leaders are Saying About Bill Shuster:



As a ten year member, Bill Shuster has received the highest "A" rating from the National Rifle Association on issues important to Sportsmen.

Sportsmen



"Bill Shuster is the only candidate to receive our Honorary Guardian of Seniors Award for his pro-senior positions on lowering taxes, protecting Social Security and Medicare, and providing prescription drug coverage for seniors. He is a proven friend of senior citizens"

Jim Martin,
President, 60 Plus Seniors

Seniors

"Taxpaying families across the 9th district should be comforted by the principled committment candidate Shuster has made to them. His decision to sign the pledge in opposition to future tax increases demonstrates that he will fight to lower taxes for all Americans."

Grover Norquist,
Americans for Tax Reform

About Bill Shuster...

- ★ Raised on a family farm in Bedford, PA
- ★ Lifelong conservative
- ★ Successful small businessman who's created jobs and balanced budgets
- ★ Bachelor's Degree from Dickinson College in History and Political Science
- ★ Master's Degree from American University in Business Administration
- ★ Married 13 years to Becky with 2 children, Ali, 12 and Garrett, 9
- ★ Member of Zion Lutheran Church
- ★ Rotary Club, Past President
- ★ Homewood Retirement and Nursing Home, Board Member
- ★ Chamber of Commerce, Board Member
- ★ National Auto Dealers Association, Board Member
- ★ Active supporter of Precious Life, New Day, the YMCA and the Child Abuse Task Force

Fighting for Lower Taxes for Families and Business

Bill Shuster strongly supports the Bush Plan to cut taxes for families and local business. And while the Democratic candidate has raised taxes on families and seniors, Bill has put his commitment to our families in writing, by signing the Taxpayer Protection Pledge.

Protecting Our Seniors

Because of Bill's pro-senior positions, he is the only candidate to receive the Honorary Guardian of Seniors Award. He will fight to strengthen Social Security and Medicare, and provide better prescription drug benefits for our seniors.

Standing Up for Conservative Values

As a lifelong conservative, Bill Shuster lives central Pennsylvania's values each day. Whether it's protecting unborn life, our 2nd Amendment right to bear arms, or pro-family values, Bill can be trusted as our conservative voice in Congress.

"Bill Shuster's experience in the community makes him the ideal candidate to stand up for Central Pennsylvania's values and support our agenda of tax relief and job creation in Congress."

President George Bush

Attached are draft procedures for political travel involving the President. I would like you to review before we circulate to Political Affairs, Scheduling, and RNC. The only thing it doesn't address is advance costs. The more I think about it, the more I think we can defend that advance is always official. Also, have you had a chance to discuss the separate hosting letter with Ken M.? I leave tomorrow at noon until Sunday..... and would like to get this into circulation before I leave.... Thanks. vbm PS I think we provide a disclaimer that these guidelines may change as circumstances surrounding political events evolve.

DRAFT –4-16-01

PROCEDURES FOR POLITICAL TRAVEL INVOLVING THE PRESIDENT

Costs associated with any political trips involving the President should follow the below listed guidelines:

1. The Scheduling Office issues approved Presidential Activity (APA) for political event.

2. The White House Management Office will review the following:

    a) Determine hard time or hypothetical formula.
    b) Estimate political percentage of trip for deposit purposes.

3. The Political Affairs will be responsible for the following:

    a) Separate hosting letter detailing procedures for trip deposit (including amount) with the Republican National Committee (RNC.)
    b) Check should be made payable to the Republican National Committee.
    c) Check should be sent overnight mail to the below address:

        Republican National Committee
        Attention: Jay C. Banning
        310 First Street, SE
        Washington, DC 20003
        (202) 863-8560

    d) The event host should pay for site costs directly.

4. The RNC will be responsible for the following:

    a) All deposits must be received 48 hours prior to event.
    b) The RNC will confirm with Political Affairs that check has been received.
    c) The RNC will set up separate accounts for each deposit.
    d) Only those invoices related to the candidate or party making the deposit will be paid from each account.
    e) When the RNC has the assurance that all costs associated with the event have been paid, they will return any remaining funds to the candidate or party.

5. White House Management will be responsible for the following:

    a) A Trip Summary is prepared by White House Management and circulated for approval from the General Counsel, Advance Office and Political Affairs.

b) Any outstanding expenses should be forwarded to White House Management and they will be forwarded to the RNC for reimbursement. Staff should not forward any expenses directly to the RNC.

6. A copy of approved trip memo is forwarded to the Military Office for any DOD and AF1 expenses. (100% official travelers will be denoted.)

Yes, but they should be informed that this is political activity and that they should not incur additional expenses for the government in preparing/producing the speech. The primary additional cost would be paper used in printing out drafts, so they should borrow a ream of paper from your office for that purpose. Otherwise, however, they are free to participate in political activity, including working on the speech.

PROCEDURES FOR POLITICAL EVENTS INVOLVING THE PRESIDENT

These guidelines may require updating as circumstances surrounding political events evolve. Costs associated with any political trip involving the President should follow the guidelines listed below:

1. The Scheduling Office issues Approved Presidential Activity (APA) for political event.

2. The White House Management Office will review the following:

    a) Determine whether hard time or hypothetical formula (only when the President is a candidate) applies.
    b) Estimate political percentage and costs of trip for deposit purposes.

3. The Political Affairs Office will be responsible for the following:

    a) Sending a separate hosting letter detailing procedures for trip deposit (including amount) with the Republican National Committee (RNC.)
    b) Communicating that the check should be made payable to the Republican National Committee, that all deposits must be received 48 hours prior to event and the deposit should be sent overnight mail to the below address:

        Republican National Committee
        Attention: Jay C. Banning
        310 First Street, SE
        Washington, DC 20003
        (202) 863-8560

    c) Communicating that the event host should pay for site costs directly.

4. The RNC will be responsible for ensuring the following:

    a) The RNC will confirm with Political Affairs that check has been received.
    b) The RNC will set up separate accounts for each deposit.
    c) Only those invoices related to the candidate or party making the deposit will be paid from each account.
    e) When the RNC has the assurance that all costs associated with the event have been paid, they will return any remaining funds to the candidate or party.

5. The White House Management Office will be responsible for the following:

    a) A Trip Summary is prepared by White House Management and circulated for approval from the Counsel, Advance Office and Political Affairs.

b) Any outstanding expenses should be forwarded to White House Management and they will be forwarded to the RNC for reimbursement. Staff should not forward any expenses directly to the RNC.

c) A copy of approved trip memo is forwarded to the Military Office for any DOD and AF1 expenses (100% official travelers will be denoted.) The Military Office will coordinate with the White House Management Office for any expenses requiring reimbursement.

On behalf of the President, I want to acknowledge and thank you for your kind invitation to _____. The President is pleased to accept. Your event has been entered on the President's schedule for (date)(time).

As you know, the air travel, ground transportation, food, lodging, and other incidental activities of the President and others who attend or assist with this event will generate certain costs that must be reimbursed by [host entity]. In particular, because this is a political event, costs that are unrelated to Presidential security, communications, and the ongoing duties of the Presidency generally must be borne by the appropriate political entity and not by the Government. In order to ensure proper payment of these costs, an advance payment of $15,000 is required as a deposit. Please send a check for that amount at least 48 hours before the event to:

Republican National Committee
Attention: Jay Banning
310 First Street, SE
Washington, DC 20003
(202) 863-8560

The RNC will coordinate directly with the White House to ensure that all invoices related to the event are paid. Once the invoices have been paid, the RNC will coordinate with you and either reimburse any remaining funds or inform you of any additional amount that is owed.

Thank you again for your invitation to this event. The President looks forward to attending.

Wow - that is remarkably accurate in terms of the selection process. And largely positive for Steele.

Steele reportedly up for federal judgeship
04/18/01
By SEAN REILLY and SAM HODGES
Mobile Register
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON - In a signal that he is the front-runner to fill a vacant seat on the federal appeals court in Atlanta, U.S. Magistrate William Steele of Mobile is undergoing the routine background investigation required before the president formally nominates him, according to staffers within the Alabama congressional delegation.

"We have heard Bill Steele is going through the background check," said Armand DeKeyser, chief of staff for U.S. Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Mobile.

The post on the 11th Circuit Court of Appeals ranks at the top of the roster of federal appointments President Bush must fill from Alabama. In Mobile, those also include two district judgeships and the posts of U.S. attorney and U.S. marshal.

While the White House reportedly is taking the lead on filling the appellate judgeship, its decisions on the remaining appointments are expected to follow the joint suggestions of Sessions and Sen. Richard Shelby, R-Tuscaloosa.

There had been reports of friction between the two men, in part because Sessions reportedly wouldn't sign off on top Shelby aide Tom Young for the 11th Circuit judgeship.

Both men denied such speculation. Although Young, a Mobilian, also has been mentioned as a possible candidate for the U.S. attorney's position or a federal district judgeship, it is unclear whether he is interested in either job. He declined comment Tuesday.

Congress is on vacation, but Sessions and Shelby hope to send a slate of recommendations to the White House soon after lawmakers return next week, aides said Tuesday.

Among other names tossed up by Mobile attorneys, Assistant U.S. Attorney Ginny Granade still is mentioned as a strong possibility for a district judgeship, while Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Moore and Mobile lawyer David York are considered leading candidates for the U.S. attorney's job. York ran unsuccessfully for Mobile County district attorney against incumbent Democrat John Tyson Jr. in 1998.

But the field shrank by one Tuesday as Baldwin County District Attorney David Whetstone called a news conference to announce his withdrawal from active consideration.

While saying the move could speed the search for a replacement to outgoing U.S. Attorney Don Foster, Whetstone added that he plans to be a player in coming years as Alabama confronts challenges such as education funding and a possible overhaul to the state's 1901 constitution.

"I felt my place is in Baldwin County and state service," he said.

Whetstone also acknowledged some party activists had voiced concern that Gov. Don Siegelman, a Democrat, would pick his replacement if he moved into the federal job.

A former state and federal prosecutor, Steele, 49, has been a magistrate since 1990. Before that, he worked under Sessions during the latter's tenure as U.S. attorney. Through an employee, Steele declined comment Tuesday.

Magistrates are appointed by a majority of the active district judges on a particular court. Although they can hear full civil cases with the agreement of both sides, they usually drop out of criminal cases soon after the defendants' initial court appearances.

Steele is a popular figure at the federal courthouse in downtown Mobile; several attorneys welcomed the news Tuesday of his apparent front-runner status.

While others had privately questioned whether Steele had the necessary connections for a shot at the appellate judgeship, Mobile business lawyer Matt McDonald said he understood Steele had "a lot of support" from the federal bench.

"Everybody recognizes that he is eminently fair and impartial," McDonald said. "... There's nothing really wild and crazy to say. He's a good guy."

Democrat Hank Caddell, another Mobile attorney, also praised Steele as "a terrific person" with "tremendous integrity and a lot of sensitivity to the attorneys that he's dealing and working with."

Although conservative overall, Steele is "extremely fair," Caddell said.

Outside of Mobile, however, at least one lawyer was less enthusiastic. Birmingham attorney Richard Meelheim represents three black men in a federal lawsuit alleging that they were the target of racial slurs and on-the-job harassment at Georgia-Pacific's Naheola paper mill in Choctaw County.

In response to a motion by the company, Steele threw out the suit last week. While not disputing many of the plaintiffs' charges, he wrote in his April 9 order that, under past rulings by the 11th Circuit, they did not rise to the level requiring legal action.

Meelheim strongly disagreed.

"I think the facts are so horrible," he said, "I can't conceive how anybody could determine that it was not sufficiently severe and pervasive" to allow the case to proceed. He plans to appeal to the 11th Circuit.

Alabama lawmakers also are closely watching President Bush's pick for the assistant Army secretary for civil works, who oversees the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which funds a host of projects in the state.

Their preferred choice is former Mississippi congressman Mike Parker, said Jo Bonner, a spokesman for U.S. Rep. Sonny Callahan, R-Mobile.

"We would certainly like to have an assistant secretary to know where we are without having to look at a map and return our phone calls," Bonner said.

Parker, a Republican funeral home director from Brookhaven, Miss., lost a run for governor against Democrat Ronnie Musgrove and has been seen little since, said Joseph Parker, a political scientist at the University of Southern Mississippi, who is not related.

"He has been about as far off the face of the earth as a person can be and still be alive since the governor's race," Joseph Parker said.

Callahan, who chairs the House subcommittee that writes the Corps of Engineers' budget, has written Bush in Parker's support, Bonner said. He believed that the delegation as a whole had sent a similar letter. As a matter of policy, the White House does not comment on possible appointees until they are officially nominated, a spokeswoman said Tuesday.

(Staff reporters Brendan Kirby and Joe Danborn contributed to this report.)

Brett,

As I explained in my voice mail, this is a letter to the editor correcting mistakes made in an article to the Federal Times. Kate Anderson has looked and made some edits. We want to make sure White House Counsel takes a look at it as well.

We take issue with the opinions voiced in the April 10, 2001 article: "White House Lags in Archiving Official Electronic Mail," as the White House complies fully with the high standards of the Presidential Records Act, including preserving and archiving all official email records.

In order to ensure that the activities, deliberations, decisions, and policies of the Presidency are preserved for future generations, White House staff has received thorough briefings on the requirements of the Presidential Records Act. Furthermore, the Counsel to the President has issued strict guidelines on record preservation which staff must follow.

White House employees are directed, if they have any doubt as to whether or not a document constitutes a presidential record that should be preserved, to save the document and contact the Counsel's office for guidance.

Technology designed to ensure security and proper preservation is used in order to capture email created and received by White House users that constitute presidential or federal records. The Automated Records Management System (ARMS) automatically copies internal e-mail designated by users as records in a word searchable format for preservation and eventual transfer to the National Archives and Records Administration. Although there were some technical glitches in the interface to ARMS during the prior administration that prevented certain e-mail from being captured in the system and necessitated restoration from backup tapes, these glitches have been repaired. Moreover, the White House is working with the Information Systems and Technology Division of the Office of Administration, and the National Archives to further improve the system.

The White House Office of Records Management enjoys a close relationship with the National Archives. The White House Office of Records Management has already met with the director of the National Archives' Modern Records Program in two formal meetings where a wide range of records management issues were discussed, including improvements to ARMS. White House officials have also met with representatives from the General Accounting Office to discuss how to improve management controls over the creation, use, maintenance and safeguarding of electronic records to ensure their proper preservation.

The White House and the National Archives share a common goal of ensuring that a comprehensive, complete record of this Administration is preserved for future generations. Likewise, the Bush Administration is firmly committed to adhering to the rules set forth by the Presidential Records Act.

Good morning! The North Carolina Bankers Association would like the President to tape remarks for their upcoming annual conference. Since it is a state group, the preliminary decision was to try and see if we could draft generic remarks for the President and then utilize the same tape for other banking associations for the next couple of months. This brings up two questions:

1. The North Carolina Bankers are willing to cover the cost of taping (if approved, the taping will be done in conjunction with other tapings to keep cost down). Is the re-use of the tape something we can do?

2. If it is acceptable to re-use the tape, how would we allocate costs to the North Carolina Bankers?

Your guidance would be greatly appreciated. We're on a tight turnaround so anything you can do asap would be great.

Many thanks!
Janet

Ken left for FL today for the RNC State Chairmen's meeting in Miami. He is staying and doing some political travel for the first half of next week and meeting up with the President on Wed. I have a couple of questions regarding who should pay for his travel.

Friday, 4/20- He is participating in the RNC State Chairmen's meeting. The RNC paid for his flight to Miami. He is staying Friday night, Saturday night, and Sunday night. The RNC also paid for his hotel for those 3 nights.

Monday, 4/23- He is doing a few political events in Miami that the Republican Party of Florida organized. He then flies to Tallahassee for several events there. (the RPOF paid for his flight to Tallahassee, but I booked the hotel for Monday night through the RNC)

Tuesday, 4/24- He has more events with FL Republican leadership and then flies to Jacksonville, FL to meet up with POTUS on Wednesday am. I booked the flight through the RNC.

Tuesday night- I need to get him a hotel, and I am guessing the WH travel office should pay for it. is that correct?

Wednesday, 4/25- he meets up with the President to do his events. Wednesday pm is a political event, and I believe that the RNC is paying for the staff to get down there. (it is a fundraiser for Sen. Tim Hutchinson). He drops off the trip after that event, and will need to stay overnight. I booked his flight home through the RNC.

I mainly need to know if I should book his hotel rooms for Tuesday and Wednesday night through WH office, and if you approve of all other travel payment arrangements. thanks. I am at x6-6522.

Testimony, Housing and Transportation Subcommittee Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee
April 25, 2001

Chairman Allard, Ranking Member Reed and distinguished Members of the Committee, thank you for this opportunity to discuss the Department of Housing and Urban Development's budget for fiscal year 2002.

I am both humbled and energized by the challenges that face us at this Department and this nation as we work to improve housing and expand opportunities for families seeking to move ahead. President Bush and I are committed to restoring the confidence of the Congress, the Department's constituents, and the American people in the operation of this Agency.

This budget is the first step toward restoring that confidence. This is a compassionate and responsible budget that will allow us to serve people more effectively, empowering individuals and communities across this great land.

We cannot face this challenge alone. We look forward to the support of this Congress and particularly this Subcommittee to accomplish this.

The American Taxpayer will measure our success, not by how much money we spend, or by how many new initiatives we put in place, but by how many families have a better home, by how many immigrants get the chance to buy their first house, and by how many children grow up in the kind of neighborhood we all want to live in.

Our existing programs must operate efficiently and effectively before we create additional programs. Simply adding new government programs does not necessarily improve the lives of the citizens who need the most help. Over the past two decades the number of programs at the department has exploded from fewer than 50 to more than 300.

The Administration's overall growth for federal spending of four percent is a responsible and appropriate level. Nevertheless, the President also recognizes that we have an obligation to serve those families who still wait for the chance to own a home. The Department of Housing and Urban

Development's proposed budget increases nearly seven percent for fiscal year 2002.

Buying a home is the biggest investment most families ever make. By building equity in that home, families can pass on wealth from one generation to the next, can provide for child's higher education, and can be used as venture capital for small businesses. All the while, strengthening their community. Every American family should have this opportunity, no matter the color of your skin.

Nearly 70 percent of all families have come to realize the American Dream and own their own home. Despite this record number of homeownership there are still communities that lag behind. Less than half of African-American and Hispanic-American families own their homes.

We can do better.

We need to tear down the barriers to homeownership. President Bush's budget includes three new homeownership initiatives to expand opportunities for hundreds of thousands of low-income and minority families.

The "American Dream Down Payment Fund" will provide $200 million to match down payment assistance, helping more than 130,000 low-income families overcome the single greatest obstacle to homeownership.

President Bush has also proposes the "Renewing the Dream Tax Credit," which will support the rehabilitation or construction of at least 100,000 homes for low-income families over the next five years.

Furthermore, this Administration will seek authority to offer low-income families new adjustable-rate mortgages. It protects new homebuyers from dramatic changes in market rates until they can establish an economic foothold.

The American Homeownership and Economic Opportunity Act of 2000, provided low-income families the ability to use rental vouchers for down payment on a home. President Bush proposes to make this provision permanent and not subject to appropriations, enabling the Department to help more low-income families become homeowners.

Finding affordable and decent housing continues to be a problem for many Americans. Almost 5 million renter households have "worst case needs" for rental housing. This number represents an eight percent decline over last year, but is still unacceptable.

In order to expand the production of affordable housing, President Bush proposes to raise the limits for FHA multi-family insurance by 25 percent. This is the first increase in nearly 10 years, and will help spur the development of affordable housing in moderate to high cost urban areas.

We are strengthening our traditional obligations to public housing by increasing the public housing operating budget by $150 million. This money can be used by local housing authorities to fund those programs that best meet their needs, including the rising costs of utilities.

President Bush and I are also continuing our strong commitment to helping families with the costs of rental housing through Section 8 housing vouchers. This budget renews all expiring Section 8 contracts at a cost of $15.1 billion – an increase of $2.2 billion over fiscal year 2001 – and funds an additional 34,000 Section 8 housing vouchers at an additional cost of nearly $200 million.

We did not request as many new housing vouchers as in previous years for two reasons. First, we cannot continue to increase the Department's budget each year by 12 to 16 percent. At the previous year's rate of increase, our budget would surpass $100 million by 2010.

Second, there has been a serious problem with the utilization of existing Section 8 vouchers by state and local agencies. Those vouchers, provided by Congress, are not getting spent. I will work with Congress to improve the utilization of Section 8 vouchers by state and local housing agencies.

There are two issues regarding the voucher utilization problem: making vouchers easier to use and improving the management capacity of local housing agencies. First, we should take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that more families are able to use their housing vouchers. While vouchers work well in most markets, there is growing evidence that families are having difficulties using vouchers in certain markets. We should resolve that. Vouchers are more than just a piece of paper; they are the first step in the process of homeownership.

Although market conditions affect the util[HITU1]ization of vouchers in different areas, under-utilization is ultimately a management issue. Good managers can overcome difficult market conditions and ensure that all of their vouchers are used. I plan to work with housing authorities to help them become better managers so that they can serve more families. We can do this through a combination of management techniques – from the Section 8 Management Assessment Program (SEMAP), a rating system that gives substantial weight to utilization rates to giving priority in fund allocation to housing authorities with high utilization rates.

While we focus on our goal of improving housing opportunities, this budget does not neglect the Department's traditional role of supporting community and economic development. Much of our activity in this regard is carried out by the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program. CDBG will receive almost $4.4 billion in funding for formula grants to meet the specific needs of local governments. CDBG funds programs that revitalize communities and help spur economic growth. This Administration is continuing the strong support of this important program.

One point I would like to bring to your attention regarding CDBG formula grants is that, while we have kept funding at historically high levels, the new Census data that is currently being released will inevitably result in changes in the funding level for each community. Some communities will get more money and some will get less. I emphasize this to explain why, even though the funding level for CDBG formula grants is kept constant for fiscal year 2002, some communities will experience a reduction in funds. Others, of course, will experience an increase.

Since we do not yet have complete population data from the 2002 Census, we cannot yet predict what these changes will be. Any estimates that we generate at this time rely on the old Census data and are subject to change.

In addition to the $4.4 billion in formula funding for CDBG, we will provide $80 million in grants to help create or expand community technology centers in economically distressed communities and provide technical assistance to those centers. Through these centers, low- and moderate-income individuals will have access to computers and technology that will improve their educational opportunities and job skills. We cannot sustain homeownership without greater economic self-sufficiency. President Bush and I are committed to begin to close the digital divide so that low- and moderate-income Americans are not left further behind. Every American deserves the opportunity to succeed in the 21st century workforce.

The President's proposed budget strongly recognizes the needs of the most vulnerable people in our society – the elderly, persons with disabilities, the homeless and individuals with AIDS. All of HUD's programs that provide assistance to these vulnerable populations will receive significant levels of funding at or above current levels.

For example, Housing Opportunity for Persons with AIDS – also known as the "HOPWA" program – will see its budget increased by an additional $20 million, for a total of $277 million. These grants, provided to state and local governments, help low-income individuals stricken with AIDS find housing assistance, as well as support services.

The budget increases funding for elderly housing programs by $6 million to $783 million. The largest Department program targeted to the elderly is the Supportive Housing for Elderly Program, which provides capital advances to finance the construction and rehabilitation of supportive housing for low-income senior citizens. This program also provides the elderly with rent subsidies to help make living in these homes affordable.

To assist those with disabilities, we also fully fund the Supportive Housing for Persons with Disabilities Program, as well as providing an additional $20 million to fund the "Improving Access Initiative." This proposal will assist those non-profit groups and community organizations across the country that are exempt from the Americans with Disabilities Act, but who still want their facilities to be accessible to persons with disabilities. It would make competitive grants available to these groups and allow them to achieve this worthy goal of opening more doors for the disabled.

In addition, we are funding at current levels – $1.123 billion – homeless assistance programs to aid those with the most pressing need for shelter. For those who lack adequate shelter, our goal should be to end chronic homelessness by getting people the help they need. At HUD, that means increasing the availability of permanent housing. This agency is committed to continuing its homeless programs, but in the future we see ourselves spending more of our resources on permanent housing, and less on social services. And we will work with HHS to reduce the barriers that prevent the homeless from accessing much needed social services.

This budget also recognizes the damage done by lead-based paint, especially to young children. That's why we have increased funding for lead-based paint hazard reduction by $10 million. I want to do everything I can to ensure that our children are protected from such dangers so that they can grow up in safe and healthy homes. Since the late 1970s, incidents of lead poisoning have declined from 3 million to 890,000. Yet despite this progress, lead poisoning remains one of the most common diseases our children face. And the solution lies in preventing lead-based paint hazards in housing.

The Department of Housing and Urban Development has been leading the effort to eliminate lead-based paint hazards in our Nation's housing stock. Our lead-based paint grant program, which began under the first Bush Administration, now funds lead hazard control operations in over 200 jurisdictions across the Nation.

In the President's budget request, we have increased funding for this program by $10 million. Since HUD cannot solve this problem alone, this additional money will go into a special grant program that will leverage more resources from the private sector to meet the needs of our children.

The President also increased the amount of funds available for fair housing enforcement. If this Agency is to fulfill its mission of increasing homeownership and affordable housing opportunities for all citizens, then we must pledge ourselves to the principles embodied in our fair housing laws.

While most of the Department's programs are funded at last year's historically high levels, or have received a slight increase, there have been a few well-publicized reductions. Let me take a few minutes to address these specific reductions.

One such program is the Public Housing Drug Elimination Program. Though no one can argue with the good intentions behind this program, unfortunately it suffered from a large number of abuses. Not only did the Inspector General find that it was nearly impossible to measure the program's effectiveness, but she has also severely criticized it for funding such inappropriate activities as unauthorized travel, bank loans, and Christmas parties.

Some funds were used by the Department to implement a gun buy-back program, which the Comptroller General ruled was not a legal use of funds. Drug Elimination funds were also spent to provide public housing residents with "creative wellness" programs. These scientifically dubious programs – which made use of things like gemstones and incense – were not only a waste of taxpayer dollars, but also a significant diversion from this Agency's mission.

We need to restore confidence that the Department of Housing and Urban Development can carry out its core mission. We are a bricks-and-mortar agency, not a law enforcement agency or an agency with expertise in dealing with drug abuse. To the extent that there are law enforcement issues surrounding our public housing projects, we will work with the Justice Department and state and local police departments. To the extent that there are drug problems in public housing, we will work with those federal, state, and local agencies that are in a much better position to address these problems.

Although we have eliminated this $309 million program, we have taken, as I mentioned earlier, $150 million of those funds and placed them in the Public Housing Operating Fund. This extra $150 million can be used for a wide variety of purposes, including the continued funding of successful anti-drug efforts. But rather than mandating that housing authorities use this money for drug elimination programs, we trust these authorities to make those tough decisions about what programs best meet their needs.

If certain housing authorities found that fences, lighting, and greater police patrols funded by the Drug Elimination Program helped reduce crime and drug use, then they will have the opportunity to continue funding these worthwhile programs from the additional $150 million in the Operating Fund. Good anti-drug programs in our public housing projects will continue to find funding, while we filter out the waste and abuse that tarnished a program that began with such noble intentions.

Another reduction in our budget occurs in the Public Housing Capital Fund. Our fiscal year 2002 budget provides nearly $2.3 billion for the fund, which is a reduction of $700 million from the previous fiscal year. This money is sufficient to cover 100 percent of the modernization needs of housing authorities that are expected to accrue next year.

The purpose of this reduction is to draw down capital funds that have already been appropriated, but not yet expended by public housing authorities. Currently, there are $5 billion in unspent capital funds from previous fiscal years, of which $3 billion have not even been obligated. These figures do not include the $3 billion that was appropriated for fiscal year 2001. Once the Department finishes distributing fiscal year 2001 capital funds and approving plans for using those funds, housing authorities will have a total of $8 billion in unspent capital funds available to meet their modernization needs.

These billions of dollars of unspent capital funds ensure that no roof at any public housing project has to go unrepaired and no severe modernization has to be neglected. Public housing authorities currently have the funds that are necessary to begin addressing the backlog of modernization needs. Our fiscal year 2002 budget encourages them to spend those funds to address their priority needs.

We are not just looking to housing authorities for solutions to the problem of unspent funds. We are also examining the Department's practices to determine whether funds are distributed and spent in a timely manner. Among other steps that we plan to take is a change in the timing of our initial allocation of funds to housing authorities, ensuring that they get funds sooner than in prior years.

REV_00125965

I look forward to working with the Congress on the many issues facing the Department of Housing and Urban Development. I know that right now Congress is conducting two important commissions – the Millennial Housing Commission and the Commission on Affordable Housing and Health Care Facility Needs in the 21st Century. The Department is eager to provide Congress with any help it may need in its work with these two commissions.

I look forward to continuing a strong relationship with Congress so that together we can make the Department of Housing and Urban Development an efficient and effective fighter on behalf of America's housing and community development needs.

Thank you.

I have reviewed, and everything looks correct. As to Tuesday and Wednesday night, you can use RNC.

Subject: Travel

Ken left for FL today for the RNC State Chairmen's meeting in Miami. He is staying and doing some political travel for the first half of next week and meeting up with the President on Wed. I have a couple of questions regarding who should pay for his travel.

Friday, 4/20- He is participating in the RNC State Chairmen's meeting. The RNC paid for his flight to Miami. He is staying Friday night, Saturday night, and Sunday night. The RNC also paid for his hotel for those 3 nights.

Monday, 4/23- He is doing a few political events in Miami that the Republican Party of Florida organized. He then flies to Tallahassee for several events there. (the RPOF paid for his flight to Tallahassee, but I booked the hotel for Monday night through the RNC)

Tuesday, 4/24- He has more events with FL Republican leadership and then flies to Jacksonville, FL to meet up with POTUS on Wednesday am. I booked the flight through the RNC.

Tuesday night- I need to get him a hotel, and I am guessing the WH travel office should pay for it. is that correct?

Wednesday, 4/25- he meets up with the President to do his events. Wednesday pm is a political event, and I believe that the RNC is paying for the staff to get down there. (it is a fundraiser for Sen. Tim Hutchinson). He drops off the trip after that event, and will need to stay overnight. I booked his flight home through the RNC.

I mainly need to know if I should book his hotel rooms for Tuesday and Wednesday night through WH office, and if you approve of all other travel payment arrangements. thanks. I am at x6-6522.

That is correct. This is a traditional situation where government officials simply brief an affected industry on Administration policy and accept questions from and listen to concerns of the affected industry representatives. That is part of the President's constitutional duty and thus is entirely permissible.

leaving message on this -
the VP Office was pretty intent on including some form of language to tell the coal leaders:
"The National Energy Policy Development Group has not yet finished their study and will not yet release their work and is restricted from doing so by regulatory procedures." The worry being that we need to make it clear to these folks that this is NOT a meeting wherein they are being asked to affect/change the upcoming policy - especially considering all the open-meetings laws, etc., that are being levelled against the group now.
please let me know your thoughts at you earliest convenience -
thanks -

COAL LEADERS MEETING: PROGRAM

Emcee: Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp - intro and welcome (2 minutes)

Program:
1) Secretary of Energy Spence Abraham: Opening Remarks (10 minutes)
- Administration sees coal as an important part of a balanced national energy policy
- this priority is reflected in the budget
- also in the Research and Development tax grant
- Clean coal is an important part of making this priority into a reality
- and ending regulatory uncertainty is a second top priority to this end

2) Energy Council Director Andrew Lunquist: Energy Council overview (10 minutes)
- the nation is facing an energy crisis due to years of neglect
- action needs to be taken now
- President Bush is providing that leadership through the principles of his energy plan (lay out principles)

3) National Economic Council Deputy Director Robert McNally : Energy Economics (8 minutes)
- the coal economy is extremely important to many regions of the country
- the President's energy plan supports that coal economy (specific examples)
- The President's plan therefore supports the American economy (broader economic themes)

4) Comments, Questions, and Answers (15 minutes)

- Lundquist/McNally to take comments/questions for 15-20 minutes

5) Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp: Energy Politics and Action Items (8 minutes)
- The President's plan will succeed with support from the leaders in this room
- here's how you can help (op-ed letters, talking to local reporters, informing constituents)

END. Total Program (approx. 55 minutes).

The White House is inviting 100-150 Energy Leaders for a briefing on Energy Policy on April 25, 2001 from 4:00pm - 5:00pm in Room 450 of the Eisenhower Executive Office Building .

The agenda is:
1) Secretary of Energy Spence Abraham: Welcome and Opening Remarks
2) Energy Council Director Andrew Lunquist: Energy Policy
3) National Economic Council Deputy Director Robert McNally : Energy Economics
4) Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp: Energy Politics and Action Items

Invitees should include leaders in the Energy field we have discussed.

Invitees should be instructed to arrive at the Pennslyvania Avenue entrance of the EEOB at 3:30pm. They will be met by White House staff stationed at that entrance to guide them to the event, where they will receive talking points and a packet of information material to be reviewed by the speakers.

Attached, please find the confirmation document you should use in inviting leaders to the event. The document should be returned to Michael Napolitano on April 23rd at michael_j._napolitano@who.eop.gov, with all information completed and including only confirmed attendees.

Thanks.

Did anyone catch NPR this morning? There was a "story" on judges, in which the Michigan senators repeated their threat to block all Republican nominees to CA6 unless the Clinton nominees get a hearing, and in which Sen. Edwards (NC) suggested that he would act similarly unless Wynn (Clinton nominee) too gets a hearing. NPR is running another segment on this issue tomorrow.

Emcee: Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp - intro and welcome (2 minutes)

Program:
1) Secretary of Energy Spence Abraham: Opening Remarks (10 minutes)
- Administration sees coal as an important part of a balanced national energy policy
- this priority is reflected in the budget
- also in the Research and Development tax grant
- Clean coal is an important part of making this priority into a reality
- and ending regulatory uncertainty is a second top priority to this end

2) Energy Council Director Andrew Lunquist: Energy Council overview (10 minutes)
- the nation is facing an energy crisis due to years of neglect
- action needs to be taken now
- President Bush is providing that leadership through the principles of his energy plan (lay out principles)

3) National Economic Council Deputy Director Robert McNally : Energy Economics (8 minutes)
- the coal economy is extremely important to many regions of the country

- the President's energy plan supports that coal economy (specific examples)
- The President's plan therefore supports the American economy (broader economic themes)

4) Comments, Questions, and Answers (15 minutes)
- Lundquist/McNally to take comments/questions for 15-20 minutes

5) Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp: Energy Politics and Action Items (8 minutes)
- The President's plan will succeed with support from the leaders in this room
- here's how you can help (op-ed letters, talking to local reporters, informing constituents)

END. Total Program (approx. 55 minutes).

The White House is inviting 100-150 Energy Leaders for a briefing on Energy Policy on April 25, 2001 from 4:00pm - 5:00pm in Room 450 of the Eisenhower Executive Office Building .

The agenda is:
1) Secretary of Energy Spence Abraham: Welcome and Opening Remarks
2) Energy Council Director Andrew Lunquist: Energy Policy
3) National Economic Council Deputy Director Robert McNally : Energy Economics
4) Deputy Director of White House Political Affairs Matt Schlapp: Energy Politics and Action Items

Invitees should include leaders in the Energy field we have discussed.

Invitees should be instructed to arrive at the Pennslyvania Avenue entrance of the EEOB at 3:30pm. They will be met by White House staff stationed at that entrance to guide them to the event, where they will receive talking points and a packet of information material to be reviewed by the speakers.

Attached, please find the confirmation document you should use in inviting leaders to the event. The document should be returned to Michael Napolitano on April 23rd at michael_j._napolitano@who.eop.gov, with all information completed and including only confirmed attendees.

Thanks.

That is correct. This is a traditional situation where government officials simply brief an affected industry on Administration policy and accept questions from and listen to concerns of the affected industry representatives. That is part of the President's constitutional duty and thus is entirely permissible.

Thanks Brett.
We will leave the language the way it is written then.

One more question, just to confirm:
You are okay with the packet of material, talking points, and contact info for Kirk Blalock that we propose to hand out to the meeting attendees?

leaving message on this -
the VP Office was pretty intent on including some form of language to tell the coal leaders:
"The National Energy Policy Development Group has not yet finished their study and will not yet release their work and is restricted from doing so by regulatory procedures." The worry being that we need to make it clear to these folks that this is NOT a meeting wherein they are being asked to affect/change the upcoming policy - especially considering all the open-meetings laws, etc., that are being levelled against the group now.
please let me know your thoughts at you earliest convenience -
thanks -

Many apologies, but the VP Counsel's office has made a few edits and punted back to you.
The packet of materials is on your chair:
1) Talking points: Can we say the things that are listed in the talking points?
2) Packet of info: Can we distribute the "Energy Briefing" material as is to the attendees?

let us know, and thanks very much Brett - Cancel the request. The Energy Policy legal counsel is reviewing the documents now -- they've been working on this for a while so they feel comfortable telling us what to do.

Unless you want to review the documents as well, we'll leave it in their hands.

HEADLINE: GROUND RULES FOR SENATE'S CONSIDERATION OF JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS

ANCHORS: BOB EDWARDS

BODY:

BOB EDWARDS, host:

This is MORNING EDITION from NPR News. I'm Bob Edwards.

The Senate Judiciary Committee meets today to determine the rules for considering President Bush's lower-court judicial nominations. It's expected to be a combative session. When President Clinton left office, the Republican-controlled Senate had failed to act on 44 judicial nominees. Many were appellate court nominees who had been waiting for confirmation for years, and there were 36 slots with no nominees. With retirements and deaths, there are now a hundred empty judicial seats nationwide, and that's nearly an eighth of the federal judiciary. NPR legal affairs correspondent Nina Totenberg has the first of two reports.

NINA TOTENBERG reporting:

In the Clinton years, the nation had to learn to live with a permanently undermanned federal judiciary. It was common to have 80 to a hundred or more unfilled seats, in part because Clinton was slow to nominate, but mainly because the Republican-controlled Senate was molasses slow to act on his nominations. In 1997, Senate Republican leader Trent Lott smile broadly when asked if the GOP was deliberately slowing down the confirmation progress.

Senator TRENT LOTT (Majority Leader): Sound like a good idea to me. I mean, you know who some of the most unpopular people in America are. I think they've got--you know, they maybe are at the top of the list. When I go home, nobody says, 'Oh, please give us some more federal judges.'

TOTENBERG: Now, however, the shoe is on the other foot, and the Republican White House is trying to move quickly to fill judicial slots, some of which have been vacant for more than five years.

Alberto Gonzales is President Bush's top White House lawyer, counsel to the president. He says that the difference between President Clinton and President Bush is that, for Bush, judges are a priority.

Mr. ALBERTO GONZALES (White House Counsel): He certainly communicated to me that filling these judgeships is a priority for him. I think that, if you think about it, how important this decision is, many of the president's programs, no matter how worthy they are or how popular they are, they can be undone by the next Congress or undone by the next president. But a federal appointment lasts a lifetime. That decision is permanent.

TOTENBERG: The trouble is that during the Clinton years, Republicans perfected a system of Senate inaction on judicial nominations. People like then-senator and now Attorney General John Ashcroft figured out that it was better to stall, often for years behind the scenes, rather than having a confrontation. The tactic worked almost too well. As one former Reagan administration official said recently, 'I warned them it would come back to haunt them.'

The Democrats, to put it bluntly, feel abused; Democrats of all regions and ideologies. Take Senator John Edwards of North Carolina.

Senator JOHN EDWARDS (Democrat, North Carolina): In our state of North Carolina, we haven't had a hearing on getting a b judge on the United States Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit in eight years now. North Carolina, which is the largest state in the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals' geographical area, is unrepresented; we don't have a single judge. Judge Wynn, a moderate, middle-of-the-road, African-American judge, highly respected, couldn't even get a hearing. And it's just an outrage that somebody that well-qualified couldn't even get a hearing. And what I'm saying is we're not now just going to flip and have the president and others just push through people who they think represent their view. There has to be balance.

TOTENBERG: Or take Senator Carl Levin of Michigan. He sponsored two highly qualified women, who were nominated to the US Court of Appeals for the 6th Circuit. One was a state court judge; the other, an African-American, was head of the appellate section of a major corporate law firm. But Michigan's other senator back then, Republican Spencer Abraham, blocked consideration of either women; one for a year, the other for four. Senator Levin.

Senator CARL LEVIN (Democrat, Michigan): At the time that that was done, I told my friends on the Judiciary Committee, my Republican friends, that they were setting a pattern. Now the president has a choice. He can either renominate these two women to two of the four open positions on the Court of Appeals in the 6th circuit that will be filled by Michigan nominees, or he can refuse to do so, in which case I think he'd be digging himself into a deeper hole for all of his nominees.

TOTENBERG: Said Levin if these women don't get renominated and at least get a hearing, he will see to it that no Republican choices will get one either.

How, you may wonder, can a single senator prevent a hearing, much less a vote, on a nomination? Well, in the Senate, there's a time-honored tradition called the blue slip. It stems from the constitutional provision that 'the Senate shall advise and consent on judicial nominations.' Simply put, the blue slip is the piece of paper that each senator from a nominee's home state gets. If the senator doesn't sign the paper to approve, the nomination does not go forward.

The system has continued, for good or for ill, for over a century. In the 1950s and '60s, some segregationist senators used it to keep pro-civil rights judges off the bench. And when Democrats Edward Kennedy and Joseph Biden became chairmen of the Judiciary Committee in the '70s and '80s, they relaxed the rule a bit to allow a nomination to go forward when a home state senator had been genuinely consulted and gave no good reason for his opposition.

When the Republicans retook control of the Senate in 1994, however, the new Judiciary Committee chairman, Republican Orrin Hatch, wrote to President Clinton spelling out stiffer standards for how the blue-slip system would work: 'No nomination would proceed, even to a hearing, without the agreement of both home state senators.' Now, however, Hatch is suggesting that with the Republicans in the White House, the agreement of only one home state senator may be required. In other words, the opposition of the other senator wouldn't count.

Senator ORRIN HATCH (Chairman, Judiciary Committee): If it's just one senator, then it's the option of the committee to do whatever it wants to.

TOTENBERG: On the day that Senator Hatch spoke those words into our microphone, we found his Democratic counterpart, Vermont's Patrick Leahy, just off the Senate floor. His first reaction was, well, a bit scatological; the second, more usable for the radio.

Senator PATRICK LEAHY (Democrat, Vermont): The Republicans had the rule when there was a Democratic president: that either senator refused to agree to a judge from that state, that the judge didn't move forward. But we'll follow the rule the same way that Senator Hatch followed it for the last six years with a Democratic president, and we'll maintain that same rule now with a Republican president. Otherwise, of course, there's absolutely no incentive for the White House to even talk to the senators from a state about who they're going to appoint for judges.

TOTENBERG: An hour later, Hatch and Leahy, both viewed by colleagues as pretty stable, work-it-out kind of guys, were seen in the Senate Cloakroom shouting at each other. It's an indication of just how raw tempers are over judicial nominations.

In terms of lower-court judgeships, there really weren't all that many partisan fights until the 1980s. Until then, most senators worked out arrangements with the president of the opposite party. Typically, the senator and president would alternate in making federal district court nominations, and each had the power to veto the other's choice. But for President Reagan and fellow conservatives, judgeships were a priority, and Mr. Reagan did not generally abide by such power-sharing agreements. He could get away with it because, for most of his term, Republicans controlled the Senate. But in 1988, President Bush, faced with a Democratic Senate, returned to some of those power-sharing agreements. For him, judgeships were less of a priority.

And when President Clinton took office, it quickly became apparent that judgeships were not much of a priority for him either. Indeed, Mr. Clinton made a variety of power-sharing deals with Republicans. In Texas and Alabama, for instance, the two Republican senators gave the president lists of potential nominees, and as one White House aide put it, 'From that, we chose the lead odious people for us.'

Now with a new President Bush in office, there's a new day again and a unique situation: a 50/50, evenly divided Senate. More than ever, the majority party--in this case, the Republicans--can be hamstrung by the minority. What's more, GOP control hinges on the future good health of 98-year-old Republican Senator Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, a man who, in the last six months, has grown dramatically more frail. If he should leave the Senate prematurely, it would mean almost certainly that the Democrats would retake control, at least until the next election. It is in that setting that the battle lines are being drawn. Nina Totenberg, NPR News, Washington.

HEADLINE: WHITE HOUSE AND DEMOCRATS IN THE SENATE MAY DO BATTLE OVER BUSH ADMINISTRATION NOMINATIONS TO FEDERAL JUDGESHIPS

ANCHORS: BOB EDWARDS

BODY:

BOB EDWARDS, host:

This is MORNING EDITION from NPR News. I'm Bob Edwards.

In the next few weeks, President Bush is expected to send to the Senate his first slate of judicial nominees. During the Clinton administration, the Republican-controlled Senate was so successful at blocking nominations through inaction that today there are a hundred vacant federal judgeships. Unlike President Clinton, President Bush is said to be willing to expend political capital to win confirmation of his choices. NPR legal affairs correspondent Nina Totenberg has the second of two reports.

NINA TOTENBERG reporting:

The point man for judgeships in the White House is the president's counsel, Alberto Gonzales. He has picked a team of able young conservative lawyers to help him. The Gonzales staff reads like a who's who of Supreme Court law clerks who worked for Justices Scalia or Thomas, or for former independent counsel Kenneth Starr.

Even before any nominations have been submitted to the Senate, President Bush has signalled his willingness to take on tradition in this area. One of his first actions was to notify the American Bar Association that he would no longer abide by the practice first initiated by President Eisenhower in the 1950s, the practice of having the Bar Association screen potential nominees for their professional qualifications before a nomination was submitted to the Senate. During the fall campaign, Mr. Bush said his role models for a Supreme Court justice were Justices Scalia and Thomas, the high court's two most conservative members. And White House counsel Gonzales says the same holds true for lower-court judgeships as well.

Mr. ALBERTO GONZALES (White House Counsel): He agrees with the way they view their role in our system of government, the limited role of judges. So that's what he would expect for lower-court judges as well.

TOTENBERG: Democrats in an evenly divided Senate, and some Republicans as well, have a somewhat different idea. New York's Charles Schumer is the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee that oversees judicial nominations.

Senator CHARLES SCHUMER (Democrat, New York): They clearly have a choice. They can work with us and get a good portion of what they want, but they will have to both consult with us and moderate their appointments. I don't expect them to pick liberal Democrats, but I also don't expect there to be an unstated litmus test where every judge who comes out is of the Scalia-Thomas school. Or they can try to continually nominate people who meet their hard-right ideological test and try to roll us. It seems right now their view is 'My way or no way.'

TOTENBERG: White House counsel Gonzales says that if the Democrats want a fight, this president, unlike his Democratic predecessor, will oblige.

Mr. GONZALES: It's up to the Senate. And if we have a battle, we're going to have a battle.

TOTENBERG: Gonzales says that he understands the process includes consulting with the Senate, but what he means and what the senators mean by 'consultation' may be two entirely different things. Listen, first, to the way Gonzales describes the consultation process.

Mr. GONZALES: They want to be consulted and advised. It's important for them vis-a-vis their constituents. I have been meeting periodically now for the past month and a half with members of the Judiciary Committee to introduce myself, to solicit their input, get their advice, ask for their help in getting the president's nominations.

TOTENBERG: Now listen to the way Senator Schumer describes his meetings with Gonzales.

Sen. SCHUMER: There were no negotiations. It was a listening session, and I don't think we had much input.

TOTENBERG: Indeed, even Republican Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch describes the meetings so far this way.

Senator ORRIN HATCH (Republican, Senate Judiciary Committee): Well, between you and me, they haven't had time to consult with anybody. They're just in the process of determining who they're going to nominate.

TOTENBERG: In this process, the Democrats are not powerless if they remain unified. Senator Patrick Leahy, the ranking Democrat on Judiciary, says, for example, that the Democrats will insist that they have the so-called 'blue slip power' that Republicans had over President Clinton's judicial nominees, meaning that if both home state senators don't approve of a nominee and sign his or her blue slip, the nomination will not go forward.

Senator PATRICK LEAHY (Democrat, Senate Judiciary Committee): The Democratic caucus will follow the past practice of blue slips. If there's not a blue slip of approval, then we are not going to be supporting a judge moving forward.

TOTENBERG: So does that mean you filibuster?

Sen. LEAHY: Well, we'll just see what happens. They established a tradition, and I think we'll just maintain it.

TOTENBERG: Privately, Democrats concede they are not entirely comfortable with what they call the kind of ideological attacks that Republicans engaged in against Democratic nominees. Senator Schumer points, for example, to last year's nomination of Gerard Lynch, a distinguished scholar and prosecutor, to a federal district court judgeship in New York. Thirty-six Republican senators voted against Lynch because he had clerked for the liberal Supreme Court Justice William Brennan and written a tribute to him. Democrats are anxious not to do that against similarly distinguished Republican conservatives. But they are willing to go to the mat to be a check on what they see as unfettered presidential power.

Democrat John Edwards of North Carolina notes that Republicans four times prevented appeals court appointments from his state going forward in the Clinton administration, and he's not about to lie down quitely and let the GOP profit from what he sees as that obstruction.

Senator JOHN EDWARDS (Democrat, North Carolina): There are two things that we can do. One is fight to keep the blue slip system in effect. The remaining power is either to vote against or, if necessary, to filibuster. I don't want to be an obstructionist. But I think we have to have balance. You know, we can't have eight years of nobody going on the court, and then all of a sudden they just ram through a bunch of people who have a perspective that, in some people's view, wouldn't be representative of the American people.

TOTENBERG: Not only did Republicans block many Clinton judicial appointments, they said there was no need to fill vacancies on some courts; that there were enough judges already. That is not, however, the view of the Bush White House now that they have the power. Counsel Gonzales.

Mr. GONZALES: I will just say that with respect to filling vacancies, there is a US statute that says the president shall, shall fill vacancies. And the truth of the matter is it is Congress that created these positions, and we're going to fill them.

TOTENBERG: Indeed, the White House informed Senator Edwards last week that it is now vetting two potential nominees from North Carolina for the appeals court that Republicans previously said had enough judges. One proposed Bush nominee is a district court judge and former staffer for Senator Jesse Helms whose nomination on the court withered on the vine when the first President Bush left office. The second is a black Republican lawyer and ally of Justice Clarence Thomas. Senator Edwards is not saying he will necessarily oppose either man. What he is saying is that for these nominations to fly, there will have to be a package deal: some Democratic appointees and some Republicans. In short, say the Democrats, there are solutions short of gridlock. Senator Schumer outlines, for example, what the solution might be in a state with two Democratic senators.

Sen. SCHUMER: Well, it seems to me that it would be fair to have one of two things: either sort of 50-50, split them; or an idea that each of us could come in and veto the other person's appointments. And that would push appointments to the middle.

TOTENBERG: At least a half dozen states have a tradition of bipartisan commissions to come up with and screen potential nominees. In Wisconsin, for over 20 years, Republican and Democrats, for example, cooperated on a screening commission even when there was one Democrat and one Republican senator. Now there are two Democratic senators, both on the Judiciary Committee, and they have asked Republican Congressman James Sensenbrenner, the chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to name the GOP members of the screening commission. He, however, is balking unless the GOP has the controlling vote. That is something the White House has been demanding in other screening committee situations, so far to no avail.

White House counsel Gonzales points to California as the first place he succeeded in making a deal. But there he had to back off his insistence on the GOP-named chairman having the tie-breaking vote. The deal worked out with Democratic Senators Feinstein and Boxer is a screening commission with three Democratic members and three Republicans under the agreement no name will be forwarded to the White House unless he or she has a majority of the committee votes. White House counsel Gonzales.

Mr. GONZALES: Give us an opportunity. Give your president the opportunity to show what kind of people he's going to nominate to the federal bench. You know, people's minds change. Some people that may have not voted for the president may be fully supportive of the kind of people that he intends to put--or hopes to put--on the federal bench.

TOTENBERG: Alberto Gonzales, counsel to President Bush. Nina Totenberg, NPR News, Washington.

EDWARDS: The time is 19 minutes past the hour.

In the next half-hour of MORNING EDITION, international athletes who come to the US with hopes of making it in the big leagues.

Mr. UGO UDEZOWE: The world is so small right now. I guess wherever you are, in Europe, anywhere, I mean, if you think you can excel to the highest level of the sport, I mean, you want to play in the NBA.

This matter relatesdirectly to the Bush Administartion budget proposal to preclude further citizen suits to compel FWS to designate habitat.

The attached information explains the proposed final rule regarding critical habitat for the piping plover (bird). Specifically, we are concerned about the rule that effects the wintering population (coast of Texas). The rule is expected is be made on Monday, April 30th. This could have a devastating impact on Texas.

Thanks,

Barry

The US Fish and Wildlife Service's Designation of Critical Wintering Habitat for the Piping Plover Has a Major Adverse Impact on the Texas Gulf Coast

Summary: The FWS is under a court imposed April 30, 2001 deadline to designate wintering habitat for the piping plover. (There is a parallel rulemaking for nesting habitat located in the Great Lakes area which does not affect the Gulf states and which can go forward to finalization independent of the wintering habitat rule.) If left unchanged, very large elements of the Texas Gulf Coast, including major tracts of private property, will be included in the wintering designated habitat. Such inclusion of these private properties potentially will expose the private landowners to loss of dominion over their land and to regulatory control by the FWS. Strong legal and economic reasons exist for FWS NOT to designate the critical habitat so broadly. Immediately the White House and the Interior Department should give serious consideration to the numerous strong objections and comments provided by adversely affected parties in Texas and elsewhere along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, which thus far are being ignored by FWS and therefore make the wintering habitat rule legally flawed. The wintering habitat rulemaking should be re-opened with permission from the district court and the adversely affected Texas parties comments should be reflected in a revised plan.

Background:

On February 7, 2000 (filed February 8th) the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia handed down a decision in Defenders of Wildlife v. Bruce Babbit, et. al. The Court ordered the defendant, the US Fish and Wildlife Service ("FWS") to publish its proposed rule designating critical habitat for the Great Lakes Plover on or before June 30, 2000 and a proposed rule designating critical habitat for the Great Plains Plover on or before May 31, 200l. The final rule for the Great Lakes Plover was to be completed by September 30, 2000; the Great Plains Plover was to be completed by September 30, 2001.

Subsequently, the defendants motioned the court to "alter or amend" the judgment. Upon consideration of the motion, the court decided to modify its February decision. The new order stated that the final rule for the critical habitat designation for the Great Lakes piping plover shall be completed by April 30, 2001; final rule for the Great Plains piping plover was changed to March 15, 2002.

In complying with the court order the Fish and Wildlife Service issued a proposed designation of critical habitat for wintering piping plovers on July 6, 2000. The listing of the species occurred on December 11, 1985. The proposed designation includes 146 areas along the coasts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. The proposed rule would cover 1, 672 linear miles of shoreline along the Gulf and Atlantic coasts and along margins of interior bays, inlets and lagoons and include over 2,100,000 acres of private and public land. The total population of piping plover in the U.S. is approximately 5,500 birds. Of this population, only 63% (or roughly 3,500) birds have been identified as wintering within the proposed critical habitat region.[1]

RESULT: The proposed designation allocates some 600 acres per bird despite the fact that the average plover is approximately six inches in length and weighs approximately two ounces.

I. Coalition of affected interests from North Carolina down though Texas Strongly Oppose the FWS designation.

A Coalition of various interests from the states affected by the designation, ranging from North Carolina down the Atlantic and around the Gulf Coast to Texas, have engaged the FWS proceedings in strong opposition to the proposed overly broad designation of wintering habitat. Included in this Coalition are: the Florida Shore and Beach Preservation Association; Florida Inland Navigation District; Town of Oak Island, NC; Town of Caswell Beach, NC; Town of Holden Beach, NC; Town of Ocean Isle Beach, NC; Town of Topsail Beach, NC; Brunswick Beaches Consortium; Outer Banks Preservation Association; Mid-Island Surfcasters; North Carolina Beach Buggy Association; Texas Shore and Beach Association; San Luis Development Corporation, Houston, TX; City of Port Aransas, TX; City of Corpus Christi, TX; Corpus Christi Chamber of Commerce; Nueces County, TX; Stewart Title, Corpus Christi, TX; Padre Island Homeowners Association; Padre Island Business Association; Western Geophysical, Houston, TX; and BNP Petroleum, Corpus Christi, TX.; Dunn-McCampbell Royalty Interest, Inc.; Dunn Padre Corporation; John G. and Marie Stella Kenedy Memorial Foundation; and Coastal Bend Bay and Estuaries Program, Inc.

Arguments against the designation: The Texas interests involved in the Coalition have raised numerous legal and economic arguments in thier materials filed with the FWS including:

Legal Arguments

1) The Section 7 consultation is far more onerous that the FWS concedes. The FWS asserts that "critical habitat designation is not expected to require any further project modifications beyond those required by the listing of the piping plover."

- If a project requires a federal permit, receives federal funding, or has any other federal nexus, the fact that the project includes an area that has been proposed to be designated as critical habitat triggers the ESA section 7(a) (2) consultation process.

[1] Comments made by Lee Elliott, author of the proposed rule.

- Section 7 consultation often leads to permitting delays ranging between eighteen and twenty-four months, or more, together with greatly increased costs associated with operational modification, timing uncertainties, and costs associated with analyzing and responding to environmental studies such as Environmental Impact Statements. The mere possibility of facing section 7 consultation will effectively quash many planned development projects.

2) The best scientific data available does not support the proposed rule

- The U.S. Supreme Court has cautioned that the overall goals of species preservation do not empower the FWS to forego the responsibility to utilize the "best scientific data available." This standard is to "ensure that ESA [Endangered Species Act] is not implemented haphazardly, on the basis of speculation or surmise. While this no doubt serves to advance the ESA's overall goal of species preservation, it is readily apparent that another objective (if not indeed the primary one) is to avoid needless economic dislocation produced by agency officials zealously but unintelligently pursuing their environmental objectives."[2]

- In light of the Supreme Court's mandate to ensure that "the ESA is not implemented haphazardly, on the basis of speculation or surmise" the FWS ought to be hesitant to undertake a designation of critical habitat that includes over 1,600 linear miles of coastline (and over 2,100,000 acres of land in eight states) on the basis of inconclusive or unavailable data.

- The proposed rule concedes that "in some areas, adequate census data are not available to provide reliable presence or absence information for the plover." Yet, the FWS still proposes to designate areas that it believes contain the physical and biological features essential to plover conservation.[3] These are overly broad designations of areas where the FWS lacks adequate census data to provide reliable accounts of plover locations or even of the nature of the coastline.

3) The description of the proposed designation areas fails to provide adequate notice to the public

- The maps provided by the FWS fail to provide the necessary "reference points and lines" that assist parties in knowing the limits of the designation. The maps included with the public notice at the public hearing lacked sufficient detail for the public to determine the exact extent of the area designated.

- The FWS has also acknowledged publicly that the coordinates published in the Federal Register are inaccurate.

[2] Bennett, 520 U.S. at 176.
[3] 65 Fed. Reg. at 41, 785

- The FWS has also conceded that it did not conduct the detailed analysis required, admitting: "We did not map critical habitat in sufficient detail to exclude all currently developed sites consisting of buildings, marinas, paved areas, boat ramps, and similar structures. These areas do not contain primary constituent elements essential for piping plover conservation, and are not critical habitat even though they are within the mapped boundaries."[4]

4) FWS has failed to fulfill its obligations pursuant to National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (NEPA).

- FWS has made a statement that it need not prepare an Environmental Assessment (EA) or Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) pursuant to the NEPA.

- The Eighth Circuit has stated that "merely because the Service says NEPA does not apply does not make it so."[5] The ESA has not displaced NEPA, as the impact of critical habitat designation "will be immediate and the consequences could be disastrous. The preparation of an EA will enable all involved to determine what the effect will be."[6]

5) FWS has failed to adequately address and quantify the economic consequences of the proposed designation

- The designation of over 1,600 linear miles of shoreline and over 2,100,000 acres of public and private land will have significant impacts that will effect the daily activities of a substantial number of private land owners, recreational users, businesses, municipalities, and local governments. This includes impacts on land values, fiscal impacts and economic impacts in terms of lost jobs and lost economic activity.

- At a minimum, the final economic analysis must provide analysis of the economic impacts of designation of unoccupied areas, and of areas that could not conceivable serve as critical habitat such as "buildings, marinas, paved areas, boat ramps, and similar structures."

6) FWS improperly certified that the proposed rule would not exceed the thresholds of the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act (SBREFA)

[4] 64 Fed. Reg. At 41, 785

[5] Catron County Board of Commissions v. U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, 75 F.3d 1429, 1436 (10th Cir. 1996).

[6] Id.

- The FWS has concluded that the critical habitat designation will not exceed the thresholds of the SBREFA. The Draft Economic Analysis concedes that "data on small businesses and communities were not obtainable for this analysis in the given time frame."

- SBREFA requires that whenever an agency engages in public notice and comment rulemaking it must "prepare and make available for public comment an initial regulatory flexibility analysis…[that] shall describe the impact of the proposed rule on small entities, including small business, small organizations and small governmental jurisdictions." In turn, the final rule must describe "the steps taken to minimize the significant economic impact on small entities."

- In the Draft Economic Analysis, the FWS asserts that the Proposed Rule "is not expected to have a significant economic impact on a substantial number of small entities because it imposes very little, if any, additional impacts on land use activities beyond those that may be required as a result of the listing of the piping plover." Yet, the FWS admits that "data on small businesses and communities were not obtainable for this analysis in the given time frame" and that, "time did not allow a quantitative assessment of these potential impacts on small businesses and communities."

- The FWS's concession that it has not undertaken any analysis of the impact on small businesses directly contravenes Congress' intent that the agencies pay more than "lip-service" to consideration of the impact of their actions.

Economic Arguments Affecting Texas:

- Public Sector
  (1) Government revenues that depend on property values and current market transactions.
    (a) Local Governments depend heavily on the property tax and a portion of the sales tax.
    (b) Texas State government depends on royalties, severance taxes, franchise taxes and sales taxes.

---Other economic property values and income flows to the government will be affected because the public sector depends on leasing fees, as well as tax revenue from sales, franchise and property taxes.

---Because of the heavy dependency of the Texas public school system on royalties and severance taxes from oil and gas production, the State government sector will be significantly affected by the designation.

---The economic impact on the local economy will be two fold: (1) the delay of currently economically viable projects; and (2) the diversion of economic activities to competing economic regions.

- Private Sector -- Much of the economic consequences of the designation will fall solely on the private sector even though the land surface is mostly on public lands.

---Because of the conditions in the Laguna Madre Environs, it is likely that all landowners having potential habitat will need to go through the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Section 7-consultation process.

---Most landowners within the Laguna Madre Environs will incur some out-of-pocket expenses associated with a Section 7 consultation even if no plover or habitat is present. Since the final outcome of the process is uncertain, all property in the designated area will be devalued by the market place.

---The private sector will be affected because private mineral owners and the State of Texas lease to the oil and gas industry the rights to explore for oil and gas reserves underlying the designated areas.

---Other private sector property owners will be affected because real-estate developers construct and develop properties on land leased under long-term agreements with the Texas General Land Office and concession rights on state and federal lands

---Finally, private property owners of watercraft and related fishing and beach access facilities, and adjacent areas lodging, service industry and retail business establishments will be affected because of reduced business from tourism and recreational activities.

Selected Illustrations of Economic Impact:

- Natural Gas Production Impacts – Delay of a major natural gas production venture in the region will push the development and production period forward in time, resulting in significant near-term economic impacts. Six month and Two year delays are as follows:
  (1) Personal Income losses in the local economy, during the year of peak year impacts:
    (a) Six months -- $116.9 million per year
    (b) Two years -- $269.0 million
  (2) Employment impacts in the local economy
    a) Six months – 4,052 jobs
    b) Two years – 13, 285 jobs
  (3) Impacts on value-added

(a) Six months -- $274.6 million
(b) Two years -- $900.4 million

(4) State severance tax and royalty losses
(a) Six months -- $74.3 million
(b) Two years – $243.5 million

(5) Property value impact
(a) Six months -- $105.9 million
(b) Two years -- $393.7 million

- Real Estate Development and Tourism in the Corpus Christi Area: The Packery Channel Project

(1) Personal income losses in the local economy
(a) Six months -- $ 8.9 million
(b) Two years -- $27.0 million

(2) Employment impacts in the local economy
(a) Six months – 250 jobs
(b) Two years – 627 jobs

(3) Value added
(a) Six months -- $17.9 million
(b) Two years -- $71.5 million

(4) Impact on property value of real estate ventures
(a) Six months -- $30.9 million
(b) Two years -- $117.3 million

(5) Impact on Local area property tax collections due to property devaluation
(a) Six months -- $744,000
(b) Two years -- $2.8 million

Current Regulatory Status:

The FWS is currently making its final headquarters level review of the maps designating the critical habitat with the intention of meeting the court's April 30 deadline. OMB must approve of the final FWS action before presenting it to the court.

The Texas Coalition has urged FWS to adopt three requests designed to facilitate modification of the FWS critical habitat map: (1) request an extension of time from the District Court based on the overwhelming evidence demonstrating the procedural flaws of the FWS proposed plan for designation of the winter habitat (leaving unchanged the parallel rule for the nesting habitat in the Great Lakes; (2) allow affected parties to review the revised FWS designation plan; and (3) meet with all affected parties to discuss their concerns with regard to the substantively and procedurally flawed wintering habitat plan.

Critical Habitat Designation Piping Plover – Wintering Range
Unit "TX-17" (San Jose Island)

The area designated as critical habitat unit "TX-17" encompasses a highly improved portion of San Jose Island that is wholly inappropriate for this designation. San Jose Island is a large working cattle ranch consisting of over 33,000 acres entirely owned by members of a Texas family that has championed the cause of wildlife conservation in Texas and throughout the nation, and particularly wildlife habitat preservation on the Texas coast for decades. Indeed the family's dedication to the preservation of migratory bird habitat on San Jose Island is legendary throughout the region.

To maintain the pristine character of the barrier island ecosystem, the owners have concentrated all of the improvements on San Jose Island (other than fences, cattle pens, and windmills) in the ranch headquarters area, the landing strip to the south of the headquarters, and the boat basin and dock area to the northeast of the headquarters. This boat basin and dock area and the northern portion of the landing strip have been included in the proposed "TX-17".

For over 60 years, the boat basin and dock area have served as the supply lifeline for all ranching operations on San Jose Island. This area includes a barge ramp, large covered boathouse, covered vehicle parking, and two 8,000-gallon aboveground fuel tanks in a concrete containment dike. A bulkhead and pilings with approximately ten channel markings extend out from the basin area. This is the sole boat dock area on the entire island and is used daily to load and unload livestock, ranch vehicles, equipment, and supplies, as well as to transport ranch employees. While "TX-17" is a very active and essential area for ranch operations, it encompasses less than 300 acres. With over 12,000 acres of other unimproved portions of San Jose Island being included in the proposed critical habitat designation, it is inappropriate to include the relatively small, highly improved area shown as "TX-17" in this designation.

Would it pose major problems for your White House Liasions to be PAS officials? Under the law, those officials have far more room to engage in political activity. If your Liasions are non-PAS officials, they can assist with scheduling and coordinating the Secretary's schedule, but there is a question whether they should be doing anything that requires their own independent judgment about political strategy. They arguably should not make independent judgments, for example, about which political events the Secretary should attend and which he/she should not -- as opposed to acting as schedulers/administrators. As a general matter, non-PAS officials in the departments and agencies cannot engage in political activity while in their offices and on duty. They can, however, perform duties "that assist the person engaging in the political activity." That is the line we must walk with non-PASers.

Piping Plover Talking Points:

- In accordance with a court order issued by the DC District Court on June 22, 2000, DOI's Fish and Wildlife Service must issue a final rule designating critical habitat under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) for the Great Lakes piping plover by Monday,April 30, 2001.

- The court order does not distinguish between the breeding habitat and the winter habitat for the plover–it references only "the critical habitat designation for the Great Lakes piping plover." The Secretary of Interior could be issued a contempt citation if the court finds she did not comply with this order.

- DOJ may ask the court for more time to analyze the winter habitat and other issues related to this rule. We do not know if the court will agree to this. The court already extended the deadline for issuance of this final rule (originally ordered for September 30, 2000).

- FWS currently requires NEPA compliance for designation of critical habitat only where the critical habitat designation is located within the Tenth Circuit (the states of Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Utah, and Wyoming), which is not the case here. This is because the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals (Catron County Board of Commissioners v. United States Fish and Wildlife Service, 1996) ruled FWS does have to comply with NEPA when issuing these rules. However, the Ninth Circuit Court ruled (*Douglas County v. Babbitt,*1995) that NEPA does not apply to the Service's designation of critical habitat.[1]

- FWS did produce a cost-benefit analysis of this rule. FWS does not believe this rule will have significant economic impacts since the piping plover is already listed--and therefore required to be protected--under ESA. FWS believes that the designation of critical habitat imposes few, if any, additional restrictions beyond those already imposed when a species is listed. (FWS makes this assumption–based on its interpretation and implementation of ESA–when performing economic analysis of any critical habitat rule). The Administration will continue to review these assumptions to ensure they are reflective of ESA implementation.

- It is true that FWS must produce these rules quickly in response to the many court orders requiring FWS to issue these rules. Therefore, FWS does not always have as much information as we all would like them to have to use in developing these rules. We look forward to working with FWS and Congress on how to minimize litigation on these issues and best implement the Endangered Species Act.

[1] The Ninth Circuit stated that Congress intended that the ESA's critical habitat procedures displace the NEPA procedures, NEPA is inapplicable to actions which do not change the physical environment, and that the application of both NEPA and the Act's requirements would frustrate both statutes.

Democrats Press Bush For Input On Judges Court Nominees Concern Senators
By Thomas B. Edsall

The Washington Post; Saturday, April 28, 2001; Page A04
Senate Democrats served notice yesterday that they want a say in whom President Bush nominates for federal judgeships, escalating a dispute with the White House over the composition of the nation's judiciary.

In a letter signed by all nine Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee, the lawmakers urged the administration not to weaken senators' leverage over nominees from their home states. The senators cast the warning as an important test of the administration's commitment to bipartisanship as well as the Democrats' power in the evenly divided Senate.

"We are not going to be rolled over," said Sen. Charles E. Schumer (D-N.Y.), a Judiciary Committee member who helped orchestrate the letter to White House Counsel Alberto R. Gonzales. "We are being tested."

The letter, which comes as the president prepares to announce his first judicial nominations, perhaps as early as next week, is the latest sign of Democratic concern that the administration plans to stock the federal judiciary with conservatives.

Encouraged by the president's statements holding up conservative Supreme Court Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas as models, many conservatives see the administration as an opportunity to get their ideological allies on the federal bench.

The administration's recent decision to abandon the practice of consulting with the American Bar Association on federal judicial nominees, as well as the influential role played by conservative legal groups such as the Federalist Society in the administration, has helped to fuel Democratic concerns.

The Republicans "have dispensed with consultation and with quality control checks like peer review, and now they want to stack the deck in the way the Senate handles nominations," said Sen. Patrick J. Leahy (Vt.), the committee's ranking Democrat. "It sure looks like they are intent on building an ideologically driven court-packing machine."

The administration is expected to send to the Senate as many as 40 nominees to fill district and circuit court vacancies, almost all of whom have been chosen without consultation with Democratic senators. There are 99 vacancies in the federal court system, including 31 on the 179-member court of appeals, 67 in the 665-member district court system and one on the nine-member Court of International Trade.

Democrats contend that the Bush White House has unilaterally ended the Clinton administration's practice of consulting with senators from the opposite party and giving them significant power over picking nominees.

In addition, Senate Democrats are furious over the plans of Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch (R-Utah) to end his own "blue slip" procedure giving both senators from a prospective judge's state veto power over the nomination.

Schumer said all 50 Senate Democrats support the committee's demand for a significant role in picking judges. He said the issue is less ideological than a matter of protecting one of the most valued senatorial prerogatives -- influencing the selection of judges.

A spokeswoman for Bush insisted that the administration continues to respect the role of senators in judicial selection. "The president respects the role of the Senate in advising and consenting on judicial nominees," said Claire Buchan, a deputy White House press secretary. "We have been and look forward to continuing to work with the Senate to ensure that the judicial appointments which are made are judges of high character, integrity and intellect."

Democrats contend, however, that the only bipartisan judicial negotiations so far have been between Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) and the administration. They have agreed to create a six-member panel to recommend candidates for California district court judges. Three panel members would be appointed by Feinstein and three by the administration, with the understanding that a candidate would need the backing of at least four panel members.

Former president Bill Clinton worked out similar procedures with Republican senators from 1995, when Republicans gained control of the Senate, through 2000.

In their letter to Gonzales, who is a potential Bush nominee to the Supreme Court, the nine Democrats warned: "With an evenly divided Senate, we think it is of the utmost importance that the administration coordinate closely with Democrats in the Senate, especially those from the home state of potential nominees and those on the Judiciary Committee."

Without such consultation, Schumer said, "it will be very difficult to pick judges. They are not going to be able put up a whole new federal bench in 51-50 votes." With the Senate evenly divided, Vice President Cheney casts the tiebreaking vote.

The Art of the Deal

Nominations near, Bush and senators start trading chits

Jonathan Ringel
Legal Times
April 30, 2001

As President George W. Bush gets ready to announce his first nominees to the federal bench, his judge-pickers have already realized how difficult the Senate confirmation process can be.

Squabbles have broken out over some names that have surfaced, and White House officials are hearing from senators from both parties with complaints, suggestions, and proposals that could ease the way for prospective judges.

Indeed, the president's team is negotiating territory rife with hurt feelings and long memories while pushing to take advantage of the Republicans' 51-50 edge in the Senate.

As with previous administrations, the sticking point has been the White House's consultation with senators from a potential nominee's home state -- a practice that, if ignored or mishandled, can severely hamper a nominee's chances.

Bush's team discovered this problem when reporters began inquiring about rumors that California GOP Rep. Christopher Cox was being considered for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The White House had not informed California Sens. Dianne Feinstein and Barbara Boxer, both Democrats, of the potential nomination when it began fielding calls about Cox from newspapers. According to Feinstein and Boxer staffers, the White House delivered the news while alerting the senators of media inquiries.

Boxer, one of the Senate's staunchest liberals, opposes Cox as too conservative. Feinstein -- a member of the Judiciary Committee -- refrained from judgment and plans to meet with Cox next week.

"At this point," Feinstein says, "it's unresolved."

Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, says the White House stumbled with Cox. "That happened before they knew what to do," he says, adding that the process is now moving smoothly.

Deputy White House Counsel Timothy Flanigan responds that the president's judge-pickers have always been aware of the importance of consulting home-state senators. But now, he says, "we're adapting to the political realities" in the Senate.

The importance was driven home on April 27, when Senate Democrats, led by Patrick Leahy of Vermont and Charles Schumer of New York, sent a letter to White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales reiterating their demands that the administration consider the opinions of home-state senators.

Doing so will require the Bush team to step into turf battles that go back years.

Take, for example, attempts to fill an opening on the 8th Circuit in Iowa, represented by Sens. Tom Harkin, a Democrat, and Charles Grassley, a Republican.

Harkin says he was caught off guard when Grassley announced April 19 that he expected Bush to nominate U.S. District Judge Michael Melloy to the court.

"I wasn't consulted by Senator Grassley and I wasn't consulted by the White House," says Harkin.

Harkin is particularly galled because President Bill Clinton's choice for the 8th Circuit, former Iowa state Attorney General Bonnie Campbell, had a nomination hearing last year but never got a vote up or down at the Judiciary Committee. "I don't know what action I'm going to take yet," says Harkin.

A Grassley spokeswoman responds that neither President Clinton nor Harkin informed Grassley of the nominations of district court Judges Robert Pratt and Mark Bennett -- Harkin picks who were both confirmed with Grassley's support. Grassley learned of Campbell's nomination only hours before it was made official, the spokeswoman adds.

Grassley, a Judiciary Committee member, and Harkin have always supported each other's picks, the spokeswoman says, "and he expects this practice to continue."

The White House had no response to Harkin's claim that he wasn't consulted.

But one person familiar with the ongoing process says Bush's judge-pickers are very aware of the ruffled feathers in the Senate and "are very anxious not to get caught in the middle."

BOYLE AND TROUBLE

It may be too late for that, especially when considering a 4th Circuit seat assigned to North Carolina.

In 1991, President George Bush nominated U.S. District Judge Terrence Boyle for the appeals court, but his nomination was never voted on in the Democrat-controlled Senate.

The seat has remained vacant, as Republican Sen. Jesse Helms blocked President Clinton's choice -- state appeals court Judge James Wynn, who would have been the court's first black member.

Now that a Republican is back in the White House, Boyle's name has resurfaced -- leaving North Carolina Democrat John Edwards on the defensive.

Edwards says the White House has contacted him asking his views, but would not elaborate. The loss of Wynn's nomination still smarting, Edwards adds, "I want to find a constructive way to resolve this."

Meanwhile, Hatch says he is working on a package of 4th Circuit nominations that he hopes will please groups on the left and the right. He would not discuss the details, but published reports of potential nominations from other 4th Circuit states suggest what a plan could look like.

The deal could center on Virginia's Roger Gregory, whom Clinton made the first black judge in the history of the circuit with a controversial recess appointment that expires this year. The state's two Republican senators, John Warner and George Allen, have urged Bush to make Gregory's seat permanent.

Meanwhile, Peter Keisler, a partner at Sidley & Austin in Washington, D.C., and a member of the conservative Federalist Society, has been recommended for the circuit by moderate Republican Rep. Connie Morella of Maryland. Maryland's two Democrat senators, Paul Sarbanes and Barbara Mikulski, could not be reached.

Also in the mix would be Boyle and perhaps another North Carolinian, U.S. Magistrate Judge William Webb, an African-American reportedly close to Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas.

Some Republicans hope the renomination of Gregory would soothe Democrats while several conservative figures join the circuit. It's unclear whether Bush or Senate Democrats would back such a package.

For example, Edwards, who supports Gregory, is not comfortable with that scenario because it does not give him enough of a voice on North Carolina's nominees, according to a spokesman.

REACHING OUT

There are signs, however, that the president may make some conciliatory gestures in states with two Democratic senators.

Despite the problems with Cox, Feinstein and Boxer have worked out a deal with the White House over how nominees for California's district courts will be picked. Under the deal, judicial selection committees picked equally by Republicans and either Boxer or Feinstein will forward names to the White House.

And two unsuccessful Clinton nominees to the 6th Circuit visited the White House last week, according to a spokeswoman for Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.

Last year, Michigan appeals court Judge Helene White and Detroit litigator Kathleen McRee Lewis watched their nominations die without a hearing. Levin has said he'd be reluctant to support any other nominee unless White -- who waited more than four years for a hearing -- and Lewis got a vote at the committee.

According to Levin's spokeswoman, Lewis and White had a meeting at the White House last week, but the spokeswoman did not know what was discussed.

White did not return a call. Lewis would neither confirm nor deny any meeting; she said she did not know what the White House's plans were. The White House also declined comment.

While White House lawyers and senators travel Pennsylvania Avenue to work out deals, members of the Senate Judiciary Committee are struggling to avoid parliamentary chaos when the nominations are presented.

The committee met in closed session last week to work out a plan for "blue slips," which traditionally must be signed by the home state senators before a nominee can have a hearing. The meeting, which was scheduled to last 30 minutes, dragged on for two hours. When Sen. Russell Feingold, D-Wis., emerged at one point, he described the talks as "going round and round."

After the meeting, the leaders of the committee offered slightly different versions. Hatch says he plans to follow the practice of former Democratic chairmen Edward Kennedy of Massachusetts and Joseph Biden of Delaware, who gave blue slips great weight but did not let them work as automatic vetoes.

Ranking Democrat Leahy took a more combative stance, saying no name should go forward if both senators from the home state disapprove. Leahy has threatened to force the Senate to debate each nominee over the course of several weeks.

"You've got to have blue slips," he says, or the White House won't consult with home-state Democrats.

After its early troubles, the White House has changed its consultation procedures, according to one person familiar with the process. At the beginning of the Bush administration, judicial advisers often waited to discuss the nominations with home-state senators until the Federal Bureau of Investigation had completed its background checks. Now, this source adds, all consultations will take place before the FBI starts its work.

Those consultations range from a simple phone call to a detailed discussion of any opposition to a certain judicial candidate. Says the source: "They don't want to send people on suicide missions."

O'Connor expected to stay on court

By Joan Biskupic, USA TODAY

Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, the key swing vote and moderating force on a conservative bench, apparently will not be retiring soon, according to close friends of the justice and to a court official.

O'Connor, 71, has been subject to vast media speculation about her plans, including reports earlier this year from family and friends who believed her to be seriously weighing whether to step down. Interest has intensified as summer nears and the court will be finishing its term.
That's when retirements usually occur.

Abortion rights advocates and other liberal interest groups have worried that an O'Connor departure * and a new appointment to the court by President Bush * would lead to a far more conservative court and curtailment of individual rights.

Rumors also have swirled around Chief Justice William Rehnquist, 76, and

White House
aides continue to prepare for the possibility that he might step down soon. Rehnquist, who was appointed by Richard Nixon in 1972 and elevated to chief by Ronald Reagan in 1986, has made it clear to associates that he wants to retire while a Republican president is in office. But Rehnquist has not tipped his hand about whether he would wait until further into Bush's tenure.

For months, court officials have declined to confirm or deny any reports about justices' retirement plans. But on Sunday, the court's public information office confirmed that O'Connor will not be retiring in the near future.

The comment was prompted by a question regarding an aside in a Washington Post gossip column last week. The item noted that Random House would be publishing a memoir by O'Connor about her childhood on a cattle ranch. The item said, with no attribution, that O'Connor "wants the world to know that she's not, repeat not, retiring anytime soon."

In response to a query, public information officer Kathy Arberg confirmed that the retirement item was accurate. O'Connor does not speak directly to reporters for publication.

Supreme Court nominees have to be approved by the Senate. Any Bush appointment is bound to set off a confirmation battle, particularly with the Senate evenly divided between Democrats and Republicans.

But an O'Connor retirement would be far more combustible.

Named in 1981, the court's first woman justice is generally conservative but has become a check on efforts to move the court more radically to the right. She supports abortion rights and is highly skeptical of most race-based government policies, such as affirmative action.

But she recently was the swing vote to uphold a heavily black North Carolina congressional district against charges that it was a racial gerrymander. She also dissented from the ruling last week to allow full-scale police arrests for minor offense such as driving without seat belts.

In recent weeks, people close to O'Connor have reported that she has been emphatically saying she is not leaving. At an appearance in Oklahoma City last week, when she was honored by the National Cowboy and Western Heritage Museum, she told some friends that she would not be soon retiring. An individual close to the justice, to whom she had earlier revealed some indecision about whether to stay, also said the justice was forcefully making clear that she would not retire this term.

Would it pose major problems for your White House Liasions to be PAS officials? Under the law, those officials have far more room to engage in political activity. If your Liasions are non-PAS officials, they can assist with scheduling and coordinating the Secretary's schedule, but there is a question whether they should be doing anything that requires their own independent judgment about political strategy. They arguably should not make independent judgments, for example, about which political events the Secretary should attend and which he/she should not -- as opposed to acting as schedulers/administrators. As a general matter, non-PAS officials in the departments and agencies cannot engage in political activity while in their offices and on duty. They can, however, perform duties "that assist the person engaging in the political activity." That is the line we must walk with non-PASers.

Dear Salutation,

It was a pleasure to visit with you in Fort Lauderdale, Florida last week. Listening to your concerns and discussing our plans were very helpful to me, and I look forward to working with you in the future.

President Bush is off to a great start. Thanks again.

Sincerely,

BAN THE BLUE SLIP;
ONE SENATOR SHOULDN'T VETO A JUDICIAL NOMINEE

It's not exactly news that both political parties in Congress can behave hypocritically. The latest example involves the confirmation of nominees to the federal courts, a hot subject as President Bush prepares to send his first judicial nominees to the Senate.

Under an arcane and indefensible Senate tradition, a judicial nominee can be held hostage because a single home-state senator sends a "blue slip" to the Judiciary Committee objecting to the candidate's confirmation. Now that one of their own is in the White House, the Republicans who control the Senate (thanks to the tie-breaking vote of Vice President Dick Cheney) want to modify the blue-slip tradition.

Under a proposal by Sen. Orrin Hatch, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, an objection to a judicial nominee by one home-state senator could be overcome by a statement of support from another. Thus, in states with one senator from each party, a Republican senator could

trump the blue slip deployed by his Democratic colleague.

Democrats, who objected to the blue-slipping of some of Bill Clinton's judicial nominees, are suddenly discovering the virtue of the blue slip -- or, as the practice is known at college fraternities, the blackball. And they are receiving support from other quarters.

A recent editorial in The New York Times urged that "Democrats and Republican moderates use every weapon at their disposal to force Mr. Bush and his Senate allies to a position of moderation on judicial appointments. Those weapons can include insistence on judicious use of the blue-slip policy. . . ."

We disagree. What was bad for the goose is bad for the gander. The Constitution does not give individual senators any veto power over judicial nominees. The one-senator veto is a mere custom -- one that ill serves the federal bench.

This newspaper objected during the Clinton administration when Republican Sen. Rick Santorum blocked the confirmation of Pittsburgh lawyer John Bingler for a seat on U.S. District Court here. We are equally opposed to a single Democratic senator blackballing a George W. Bush nominee.

That doesn't mean the president's judicial nominees -- especially nominees to the U.S. Supreme Court -- should be rubber-stamped. We share the fear of some senators that Mr. Bush might exalt ideology over competence in naming federal judges. We are also troubled by Mr. Bush's decision to end the American Bar Association's traditional (and constructive) role in screening potential judges.

That said, no nominee should be hostage to the whims of a single senator. If Mr. Bush proposes objectionable candidates for the federal courts -- especially the Supreme Court -- Democrats (and thoughtful Republicans) should feel free to vote those nominees down in committee or on the floor, or even resort to a filibuster. Those responses are consistent with the Constitution's grant of "advise and consent" authority to the Senate as a body. The blue slip is not.

Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am writing in response to your request for the views of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regarding the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) pay provisions in section 8 of H.R. 1088. I apologize for the long delay in getting this response to you. We greatly appreciate your efforts in this matter.

The Administration strongly opposes enactment of section 8 of H.R. 1088 for the following reasons. Those provisions would authorize the SEC to fix and adjust compensation for all employees of the Commission without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, governing the classification and pay of Federal white-collar employees under the General Schedule (GS). Further, they would authorize the Commission to provide additional compensation and benefits to employees as are being provided, or could be provided, to banking regulatory agencies listed in section 1206 of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act (FIRREA) of 1989. The objective of providing pay parity between the SEC and such financial regulatory agencies is to address the recruitment and retention problems currently experienced by the SEC, presumably resulting from their inability to compete with the compensation currently paid by such regulatory agencies.

SEC was not one of the agencies covered by FIRREA because it has a workforce with highly specialized expertise that performs different functions from the FIRREA agencies. Generally, SEC does not compete with FIRREA agencies more than it does with many other agencies for the same categories of employees.

Before an agency is granted an exemption from title 5, the Administration believes common sense dictates that the agency should be required to demonstrate that severe staffing problems remain after it has exhausted all pay flexibilities available under current law. Even then, there may remain a question as to whether pay is the sole difficulty. In any event, what is clear is that each time an agency is removed from title 5 provisions without making a solid case, more agencies are encouraged to come forward with requests for similar treatment.

The Administration is well aware of recruitment and retention problems faced by the SEC for the occupations of attorney, accountant, and examiner. Indeed, the SEC submitted a request to OPM for special salary rates for those occupations to address the problems. On March 2, 2001, OPM approved special salary rates for those occupations. The new payable rates exceed existing GS pay rates by significant amounts.

At the higher ends of the rate ranges, particularly at higher grades, the new special rates are not comparable to the rates paid by the FIRREA agencies. One of the reasons for that deficiency is the ceiling on special rates of level V of the Executive Schedule, as imposed by section 5305 of title 5, United States Code. The Administration believes it would be appropriate to raise that ceiling to level IV of the Executive Schedule. Such an increase would open up more than $8,000 of additional space for the payment to SEC attorneys and accountants of special rates already authorized but currently not payable because of the level V limitation. The annual rate of basic pay for approximately 185 SEC attorneys, accountants, and examiners would rise by an average of about $6,750 each as a direct result of an increase in the ceiling on special rates. Only one General Schedule employee outside SEC would be directly affected by this change.

The Administration believes that it would be appropriate to assess the effectiveness of the new special rates before taking more radical steps.

We also understand that the General Accounting Office is currently conducting a study of the situation at the Commission to determine whether their problems are purely compensation driven or are perhaps structural in nature.

Accordingly, the Administration recommends that precipitous action the special pay rates are used for a period sufficient to judge their effectiveness, additional data on the recruitment and retention problems at SEC are developed to assess the appropriateness of special rates for other occupations, and the GAO study is completed. Any alternative actions would be premature, for the same reasons.

One additional flexibility that has not been employed by the SEC is the pay authority for critical positions under section 5377 of title 5, United States Code. Under this authority, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) may grant an agency's request to fix the rate of basic pay for one or more positions at a higher rate than would otherwise be payable. OMB must consult with OPM, and the maximum rate payable without the written approval of the President is the rate for level I of the Executive Schedule, currently $161,200. This authority may be used only for a position that requires "expertise of an extremely high level in a scientific, technical, professional, or administrative field" and which is "critical to the agency's successful accomplishment of an important mission." Although OMB has previously considered only higher-level positions (Executive Schedule, Senior Executive Service, senior-level, etc.) for this exceptional treatment, the Administration is willing to consider the use of this flexibility for positions in the upper grades of the General Schedule.

Another important issue is what the legislation characterized as a "technical amendment" near the end of section 8 that would remove the SEC from the Senior Executive Service (SES). This is a substantive action, not a technical amendment, as it completely changes the personnel system that applies to SEC's senior executives. If this were truly a technical amendment, it would be a logical consequence of the other changes made by section 8. There is no relation between the section 8 changes and the action to remove SEC senior executives from the SES, other than to replicate what was done for FIRREA agencies. No other rationale or justification has been provided for this exemption. If the action is based on recruitment or retention problems at the senior executive level, these should be addressed initially by using flexibilities currently available to all Federal agencies, including the critical pay authority described above. The availability of this flexibility, which was designed to address senior executive recruitment and retention concerns, makes this "technical amendment" equally unacceptable.

Further, the personnel issues faced by SEC are not unique to SEC. The Administration is concerned about the increasing trend toward exemptions from all or parts of title 5, with the adverse effects on portability of Federal employees and the fragmentation of personnel systems, especially at the senior executive level. Creating another title 5 exemption, without sufficient justification, would further exacerbate the competition for talent within and across the Government.

In summary, the Administration has concluded that the special pay rates so recently granted should be given an opportunity to improve the recruitment and retention situation at SEC. Beyond that, a modest increase in the ceiling on special rates should be sufficient, along with the use of the critical pay authority, to address any exceptional needs of the SEC, including any difficulties at the senior executive level.

Thus, in the absence of a justification for the immediate adoption of the significant legislative changes proposed here, the Administration urges the Congress to strike any personnel provisions from H.R. 1088.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the President's program.

Sincerely,

Steven R. Cohen
Acting Director

`(B) except as provided in subsection (k), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

`(2) GENERAL REVENUES PROHIBITED- No fees collected pursuant to subsections (b), (c), and (d) for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.'.

(b) ADDITIONAL REDUCTIONS OF FEES-

(1) AMENDMENT- Section 31 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78ee) is further amended by adding after subsection (i) (as added by subsection (a)(7)) the following new subsections:

`(j) RECAPTURE OF PROJECTION WINDFALLS FOR FURTHER RATE REDUCTIONS-

`(1) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates applicable under subsections (b) and (c) for such fiscal year to a uniform adjusted rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for such fiscal year, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this section (including assessments collected under subsection (d)) that are equal to the target offsetting collection amount for such fiscal year.

`(2) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates applicable under subsections (b) and (c) for all of such fiscal years to a uniform adjusted rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for fiscal year 2012, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this section in fiscal year 2012 (including assessments collected under subsection (d)) equal to the target offsetting collection amount for fiscal year 2011.

`(3) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (1) or (2) and published under subsection (g) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to subsections (i)(1)(B) and (k)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (1) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (2) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(k) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect (as offsetting collections) the fees and assessments under subsections (b), (c), and (d) at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(l) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section:

`(1) TARGET OFFSETTING COLLECTION AMOUNT- The target offsetting collection amount for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2011 is determined according to the following table:

Target offsetting collection amount

2002 $585,720,000

2003	$679,320,000
2004	$822,240,000
2005	$976,320,000
2006	$1,148,040,000
2007	$880,880,000
2008	$892,080,000
2009	$1,023,120,000
2010	$1,161,440,000
2011	$1,321,040,000

`(2) BASELINE ESTIMATE OF THE AGGREGATE DOLLAR AMOUNT OF SALES- The baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for any fiscal year is the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales of securities (other than bonds, debentures, other evidences of indebtedness, and security futures products) to be transacted on each national securities exchange and by or through any member of each national securities association (otherwise than on a national securities exchange) during such fiscal year as determined by the Commission, after consultation with the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget, using the methodology required for making projections pursuant to section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- Section 31(g) of such Act (as redesignated by subsection (a)(6) of this section) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: `not later than April 30 of the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year to which such rate applies, together with any estimates or projections on which such fees are based.'.

SEC. 4. REDUCTION OF REGISTRATION FEES.

Section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77f(b)) is amended by striking paragraphs (2) through (5) and inserting the following:

`(2) FEE PAYMENT REQUIRED- At the time of filing a registration statement, the applicant shall pay to the Commission a fee at a rate that shall be equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of the maximum aggregate price at which such securities are proposed to be offered, except that during fiscal year 2003 and any succeeding fiscal year such fee shall be adjusted pursuant to paragraph (5) or (6).

`(3) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year--

`(A) shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission; and

`(B) except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

`(4) GENERAL REVENUES PROHIBITED- No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (2) for such fiscal year to a rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for such fiscal year, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this subsection that are equal to the target offsetting collection amount for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (2) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for fiscal year 2012, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this subsection in fiscal year 2012 equal to the target offsetting collection amount for fiscal year 2011.

`(7) PRO RATA APPLICATION- The rates per $1,000,000 required by this subsection shall be applied pro rata to amounts and balances equal to less than $1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (3)(B) and (9)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (6) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(9) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect fees (as offsetting collections) under this subsection at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(10) PUBLICATION- The Commission shall publish in the Federal Register notices of the rate applicable under this subsection and under sections 13(e) and 14(g) for each fiscal year not later than April 30 of the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year to which such rate applies, together with any estimates or projections on which such rate is based.

`(11) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this subsection:

`(A) TARGET OFFSETTING COLLECTION AMOUNT- The target offsetting collection amount for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2011 is determined according to the following table:

	Target offsetting collection amount
2002	$512,500,000
2003	$589,380,000
2004	$650,385,000
2005	$790,075,000
2006	$949,050,000
2007	$214,200,000
2008	$233,700,000
2009	$284,115,000
2010	$333,840,000

2011 $394,110,000

`(B) BASELINE ESTIMATE OF THE AGGREGATE MAXIMUM OFFERING PRICES- The baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for any fiscal year is the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering price at which securities are proposed to be offered pursuant to registration statements filed with the Commission during such fiscal year as determined by the Commission, after consultation with the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget, using the methodology required for projections pursuant to section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'.

SEC. 5. FEES FOR STOCK REPURCHASE STATEMENTS.

Section 13(e) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(e)) is amended

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking `a fee of 1/50 of 1 per centum of the value of securities proposed to be purchased' and inserting `a fee at a rate that, subject to paragraphs (5) and (6), is equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of the value of securities proposed to be purchased';

(2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraphs:

`(4) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission, and, except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts. No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (3) for such fiscal year to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (3) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for all of such fiscal years.

$1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (4) and (9)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (6) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(9) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect fees (as offsetting collections) under this subsection at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(10) PUBLICATION- The rate applicable under this subsection for each fiscal year is published pursuant to section 6(b)(10) of the Securities Act of 1933.'.

SEC. 6. FEES FOR PROXY SOLICITATIONS AND STATEMENTS IN CORPORATE CONTROL TRANSACTIONS.

Section 14(g) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(e)(3)) is amended--

(1) in paragraphs (1) and (3), by striking `a fee of 1/50 of 1 per centum of' each place it appears and inserting `a fee at a rate that, subject to paragraphs (5) and (6), is equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of';

(2) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (11); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraphs:

`(4) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission, and, except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts. No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates required by paragraphs (1) and (3) for such fiscal year to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates required by paragraphs (1) and (3) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for all of such fiscal years.

`(7) PRO RATA APPLICATION- The rates per $1,000,000 required by this subsection shall be applied pro rata to amounts and balances equal to less than $1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (4) and (9)--

Honorable Dan Burton
Chairman
Committee on Government Reform
U.S. House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am writing in response to your request for the views of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regarding the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) pay provisions in section 8 of H.R. 1088. I apologize for the long delay in getting this response to you. We greatly appreciate your efforts in this matter.

The Administration strongly opposes enactment of section 8 of H.R. 1088 for the following reasons. Those provisions would authorize the SEC to fix and adjust compensation for all employees of the Commission without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, governing the classification and pay of Federal white-collar employees under the General Schedule (GS). Further, they would authorize the Commission to provide additional compensation and benefits to employees as are being provided, or could be provided, to banking regulatory agencies listed in section 1206 of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act (FIRREA) of 1989. The objective of providing pay parity between the SEC and such financial regulatory agencies is to address the recruitment and retention problems currently experienced by the SEC, presumably resulting from their inability to compete with the compensation currently paid by such regulatory agencies.

SEC was not one of the agencies covered by FIRREA because it has a workforce with highly specialized expertise that performs different functions from the FIRREA agencies. Generally, SEC does not compete with FIRREA agencies more than it does with many other agencies for the same categories of employees.

Before an agency is granted an exemption from title 5, the Administration believes common sense dictates that the agency should be required to demonstrate that severe staffing problems remain after it has exhausted all pay flexibilities available under current law. Even then, there may remain a question as to whether pay is the sole difficulty. In any event, what is clear is that each time an agency is removed from title 5 provisions without making a solid case, more agencies are encouraged to come forward with requests for similar treatment.

The Administration is well aware of recruitment and retention problems faced by the SEC for the occupations of attorney, accountant, and examiner. Indeed, the SEC submitted a request to OPM for special salary rates for those occupations to address the problems. On March 2, 2001, OPM approved special salary rates for those occupations. The new payable rates exceed existing GS pay rates by significant amounts.

At the higher ends of the rate ranges, particularly at higher grades, the new special rates are not comparable to the rates paid by the FIRREA agencies. One of the reasons for that deficiency is the ceiling on special rates of level V of the Executive Schedule, as imposed by section 5305 of title 5, United States Code. The Administration believes it would be appropriate to raise that ceiling to level IV of the Executive Schedule. Such an increase would open up more than $8,000 of additional space for the payment to SEC attorneys and accountants of special rates already authorized but currently not payable because of the level V limitation. The annual rate of basic pay for approximately 185 SEC attorneys, accountants, and examiners would rise by an average of about $6,750 each as a direct result of an increase in the ceiling on special rates. Only one General Schedule employee outside SEC would be directly affected by this change.

The Administration believes that it would be appropriate to assess the effectiveness of the new special rates before taking more radical steps.

We also understand that the General Accounting Office is currently conducting a study of the situation at the Commission to determine whether their problems are purely compensation driven or are perhaps structural in nature.

Accordingly, the Administration recommends that precipitous action the special pay rates are used for a period sufficient to judge their effectiveness, additional data on the recruitment and retention problems at SEC are developed to assess the appropriateness of special rates for other occupations, and the GAO study is completed. Any alternative actions would be premature, for the same reasons.

One additional flexibility that has not been employed by the SEC is the pay authority for critical positions under section 5377 of title 5, United States Code. Under this authority, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) may grant an agency's request to fix the rate of basic pay for one or more positions at a higher rate than would otherwise be payable. OMB must consult with OPM, and the maximum rate payable without the written approval of the President is the rate for level I of the Executive Schedule, currently $161,200. This authority may be used only for a position that requires "expertise of an extremely high level in a scientific, technical, professional, or administrative field" and which is "critical to the agency's successful accomplishment of an important mission." Although OMB has previously considered only higher-level positions (Executive Schedule, Senior Executive Service, senior-level, etc.) for this exceptional treatment, the Administration is willing to consider the use of this flexibility for positions in the upper grades of the General Schedule.

Another important issue is what the legislation characterized as a "technical amendment" near the end of section 8 that would remove the SEC from the Senior Executive Service (SES). This is a substantive action, not a technical amendment, as it completely changes the personnel system that applies to SEC's senior executives. If this were truly a technical amendment, it would be a logical consequence of the other changes made by section 8. There is no relation between the section 8 changes and the action to remove SEC senior executives from the SES, other than to replicate what was done for FIRREA agencies. No other rationale or justification has been provided for this exemption. If the action is based on recruitment or retention problems at the senior executive level, these should be addressed initially by using flexibilities currently available to all Federal agencies, including the critical pay authority described above. The availability of this flexibility, which was designed to address senior executive recruitment and retention concerns, makes this "technical amendment" equally unacceptable.

Further, the personnel issues faced by SEC are not unique to SEC. The Administration is concerned about the increasing trend toward exemptions from all or parts of title 5, with the adverse effects on portability of Federal employees and the fragmentation of personnel systems, especially at the senior executive level. Creating another title 5 exemption, without sufficient justification, would further exacerbate the competition for talent within and across the Government.

In summary, the Administration has concluded that the special pay rates so recently granted should be given an opportunity to improve the recruitment and retention situation at SEC. Beyond that, a modest increase in the ceiling on special rates should be sufficient, along with the use of the critical pay authority, to address any exceptional needs of the SEC, including any difficulties at the senior executive level.

Thus, in the absence of a justification for the immediate adoption of the significant legislative changes proposed here, the Administration urges the Congress to strike any personnel provisions from H.R. 1088.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the President's program.

Sincerely,

Steven R. Cohen
Acting Director

(1) AMENDMENT- Section 31 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78ee) is further amended by adding after subsection (i) (as added by subsection (a)(7)) the following new subsections:

`(j) RECAPTURE OF PROJECTION WINDFALLS FOR FURTHER RATE REDUCTIONS-

`(1) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates applicable under subsections (b) and (c) for such fiscal year to a uniform adjusted rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for such fiscal year, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this section (including assessments collected under subsection (d)) that are equal to the target offsetting collection amount for such fiscal year.

`(2) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates applicable under subsections (b) and (c) for all of such fiscal years to a uniform adjusted rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for fiscal year 2012, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this section in fiscal year 2012 (including assessments collected under subsection (d)) equal to the target offsetting collection amount for fiscal year 2011.

`(3) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (1) or (2) and published under subsection (g) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to subsections (i)(1)(B) and (k)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (1) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (2) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(k) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect (as offsetting collections) the fees and assessments under subsections (b), (c), and (d) at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(l) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this section:

`(1) TARGET OFFSETTING COLLECTION AMOUNT- The target offsetting collection amount for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2011 is determined according to the following table:

	Target offsetting collection amount
2002	$585,720,000

2003	$679,320,000
2004	$822,240,000
2005	$976,320,000
2006	$1,148,040,000
2007	$880,880,000
2008	$892,080,000
2009	$1,023,120,000
2010	$1,161,440,000
2011	$1,321,040,000

`(2) BASELINE ESTIMATE OF THE AGGREGATE DOLLAR AMOUNT OF SALES- The baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales for any fiscal year is the baseline estimate of the aggregate dollar amount of sales of securities (other than bonds, debentures, other evidences of indebtedness, and security futures products) to be transacted on each national securities exchange and by or through any member of each national securities association (otherwise than on a national securities exchange) during such fiscal year as determined by the Commission, after consultation with the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget, using the methodology required for making projections pursuant to section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- Section 31(g) of such Act (as redesignated by subsection (a)(6) of this section) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: `not later than April 30 of the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year to which such rate applies, together with any estimates or projections on which such fees are based.'.

SEC. 4. REDUCTION OF REGISTRATION FEES.

Section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 (15 U.S.C. 77f(b)) is amended by striking paragraphs (2) through (5) and inserting the following:

`(2) FEE PAYMENT REQUIRED- At the time of filing a registration statement, the applicant shall pay to the Commission a fee at a rate that shall be equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of the maximum aggregate price at which such securities are proposed to be offered, except that during fiscal year 2003 and any succeeding fiscal year such fee shall be adjusted pursuant to paragraph (5) or (6).

`(3) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year--

`(A) shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission; and

`(B) except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts.

`(4) GENERAL REVENUES PROHIBITED- No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (2) for such fiscal year to a rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for such fiscal year, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this subsection that are equal to the target offsetting collection amount for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (2) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that, when applied to the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for fiscal year 2012, is reasonably likely to produce aggregate fee collections under this subsection in fiscal year 2012 equal to the target offsetting collection amount for fiscal year 2011.

`(7) PRO RATA APPLICATION- The rates per $1,000,000 required by this subsection shall be applied pro rata to amounts and balances equal to less than $1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (3)(B) and (9)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (6) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(9) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect fees (as offsetting collections) under this subsection at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(10) PUBLICATION- The Commission shall publish in the Federal Register notices of the rate applicable under this subsection and under sections 13(e) and 14(g) for each fiscal year not later than April 30 of the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year to which such rate applies, together with any estimates or projections on which such rate is based.

`(11) DEFINITIONS- For purposes of this subsection:

`(A) TARGET OFFSETTING COLLECTION AMOUNT- The target offsetting collection amount for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2011 is determined according to the following table:

	Target offsetting collection amount
2002	$512,500,000
2003	$589,380,000
2004	$650,385,000
2005	$790,075,000
2006	$949,050,000
2007	$214,200,000
2008	$233,700,000
2009	$284,115,000
2010	$333,840,000

2011 $394,110,000

`(B) BASELINE ESTIMATE OF THE AGGREGATE MAXIMUM OFFERING PRICES- The baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering prices for any fiscal year is the baseline estimate of the aggregate maximum offering price at which securities are proposed to be offered pursuant to registration statements filed with the Commission during such fiscal year as determined by the Commission, after consultation with the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget, using the methodology required for projections pursuant to section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.'.

SEC. 5. FEES FOR STOCK REPURCHASE STATEMENTS.

Section 13(e) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(e)) is amended

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking `a fee of 1/50 of 1 per centum of the value of securities proposed to be purchased' and inserting `a fee at a rate that, subject to paragraphs (5) and (6), is equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of the value of securities proposed to be purchased';

(2) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraphs:

`(4) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission, and, except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts. No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (3) for such fiscal year to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust the rate required by paragraph (3) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for all of such fiscal years.

$1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (4) and (9)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (6) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(9) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect fees (as offsetting collections) under this subsection at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(10) PUBLICATION- The rate applicable under this subsection for each fiscal year is published pursuant to section 6(b)(10) of the Securities Act of 1933.'.

SEC. 6. FEES FOR PROXY SOLICITATIONS AND STATEMENTS IN CORPORATE CONTROL TRANSACTIONS.

Section 14(g) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78m(e)(3)) is amended--

(1) in paragraphs (1) and (3), by striking `a fee of 1/50 of 1 per centum of' each place it appears and inserting `a fee at a rate that, subject to paragraphs (5) and (6), is equal to $125 per $1,000,000 of';

(2) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (11); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following new paragraphs:

`(4) OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS- Fees collected pursuant to this subsection for any fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as offsetting collections to the account providing appropriations to the Commission, and, except as provided in paragraph (9), shall not be collected for any fiscal year except to the extent provided in advance in appropriation Acts. No fees collected pursuant to this subsection for fiscal year 2002 or any succeeding fiscal year shall be deposited and credited as general revenue of the Treasury.

`(5) ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT- For each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2011, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates required by paragraphs (1) and (3) for such fiscal year to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for such fiscal year.

`(6) FINAL RATE ADJUSTMENT- For fiscal year 2012 and all of the succeeding fiscal years, the Commission shall by order adjust each of the rates required by paragraphs (1) and (3) for all of such fiscal years to a rate that is equal to the rate (expressed in dollars per million) that is applicable under section 6(b) of the Securities Act of 1933 for all of such fiscal years.

`(7) PRO RATA APPLICATION- The rates per $1,000,000 required by this subsection shall be applied pro rata to amounts and balances equal to less than $1,000,000.

`(8) REVIEW AND EFFECTIVE DATE- An adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) or (6) and published under paragraph (10) shall not be subject to judicial review. Subject to paragraphs (4) and (9)--

`(A) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (5) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of the fiscal year to which such rate applies; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for such fiscal year is enacted; and

`(B) an adjusted rate prescribed under paragraph (6) shall take effect on the later of--

`(i) the first day of fiscal year 2012; or

`(ii) 30 days after the date on which a regular appropriation to the Commission for fiscal year 2012 is enacted.

`(9) LAPSE OF APPROPRIATION- If on the first day of a fiscal year a regular appropriation to the Commission has not been enacted, the Commission shall continue to collect fees (as offsetting collections) under this subsection at the rate in effect during the preceding fiscal year, until 30 days after the date such a regular appropriation is enacted.

`(10) PUBLICATION- The rate applicable under this subsection for each fiscal year is published pursuant to section 6(b)(10) of the Securities Act of 1933.'.

SEC. 7. TRUST INDENTURE ACT FEE.

Section 307(b) of the Trust Indenture Act of 1939 (15 U.S.C. 77ggg(b)) is amended by striking `Commission, but, in the case' and all that follows and inserting `Commission.'.

SEC. 8. PAY PARITY PROVISIONS.

(a) SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION EMPLOYEES- Section 4(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78d(b)) is amended--

Brad/Brett--Thanks, I've passed this on to Phil. As of last night, he wanted to proceed today anyway. If that's still the case, I'll make note of the points where I think you and Brett may have a perspective or should weigh in. I think a large part of this for Phil is to begin a face to face dialogue with NARA, so we may not get to some of the more technical aspects yet anyway.
Good luck with squaring away the nominations. Adam

Adam, I'm very sorry, but Brett and I are in charge of rolling out the President's first judicial nominations next week. We're totally frantic until that happens. I don't see us being able to do this until Thursday or Friday next week. If we were any less jammed up, we would, but the heat is really intense on us right now. Please apologize to NARA for us and ask them to bear with us a few more days. Thanks.

Brad--Phil's assistant just called to let me know that he would definitely like to have the meeting with NARA tomorrow. I had mentioned to her that next week was much better for you. She proposed 1pm--I mentioned that morning was better for you, but apparently Phil's morning is full. Is 1 pm tomorrow a possibility for you and Brett?

In the mean time, I will call NARA and see how this works for them.

Because of the 4:00 cabinet meeting on May 16 we need to move the meeting time for the JSC meeting.

Stacey - Is there a time earlier in the day that the Roosevelt Room is available?

Melissa - FYI that we are moving this. Please let me know if there is a time that works best for Sec. Card.

Will send notice re: new time once we have it.

Judge Gonzales, the Attorney General, and any Senators (probably at least Hatch), should also be preset in a separate, readily-identifiable area of the seating.

Subject: Judges and Wednesday Event

After the 10 a.m. meeting this morning we huddled with Gordon, the Counsel's office, Public Liaison and others to hammer out Wednesday's event and action items. We used Bartlett's guidance and other input on the event. The President's briefing is due at 3 p.m. today so please let me know ASAP if there are serious problems with any of this. Here are details and action items:

Event:

East Room -- open press
Crowd is families and guests of nominees
Judges preset on front row (to the President's left from the podium)
Blue Goose
President enters East Room, proceeds to podium
President makes remarks (roughly 10 minutes)
After remarks President shakes hands with nominees and departs room for post-event reception.

Action Items:

1. Event logistics will be handled by Communications
2. Counsel's office will work on reception, inviting and clearing of guests with Social office, etc.
3. There will be a 1 p.m. meeting today in 196 OEOB to finalize the paper, binders, etc. It is imperative that everyone be there for this meeting.
4. DEADLINE ON ALL TALKING POINTS AND PAPERS IS COB TODAY
5. Rollout strategy needs to be set. Question is do we get binders, all our information, etc to our allies tomorrow or wait until 6. Wednesday? Do we have Counsel's office do backgrounders tomorrow for running in Wed papers?
7. Communications will craft press packet (in consultation with Counsel's office)

Let me know if I have missed anything.

DEADLINE: 2 p.m. Thursday, May 10, 2001

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: This report states VA's concerns with S546, which would extend the increase in the maximum amount of Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance (SGLI) coverage to those servicemembers who died between October 1, 2000, and March 30, 2001. VA states in its letter that covering only those servicemembers who died in the performance of duty during the same time period would represent a more financially prudent approach than S546. A similar retroactive increase to the SGLI coverage is included in H.R. 801, an omnibus veterans' benefits bill, which passed the House on March 27th under suspension of the rules.

The Honorable Arlen Specter

The Honorable Arlen Specter
Chairman
Committee on Veterans' Affairs
United States Senate
Washington, D.C. 20510-6375

Dear Mr. Chairman:

This is in response to your letter of March 30, 2001, requesting the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on S. 546, 107th Cong., a bill to expand the applicability of the increase to $250,000 of the maximum amount of Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance (SGLI) to certain servicemembers who died prior to the April 1, 2001, effective date of the increase. The Administration strongly supports providing the benefit of this increase in SGLI coverage to servicemembers who died in the performance of duty between October 1, 2000, and March 31, 2001. However, we have concerns regarding certain aspects of S. 546.

The maximum amount of SGLI available to servicemembers was increased to $250,000, effective April 1, 2001, by the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000, Pub. L. No. 106-419, § 312(a), (c), 114 Stat. 1822, 1854, which was enacted on November 1, 2000. S. 546 would provide $250,000 of coverage to all servicemembers insured under SGLI who died between October 1, 2000, and March 30, 2001, and had not elected to be insured for less than $200,000, the maximum amount of SGLI available prior to April 1, 2001.

We strongly endorse extending the increase in SGLI coverage to insureds who died in a series of recent incidents related to their performance of duty, including the terrorist bombing of the USS Cole on October 12, 2000. We believe this action is particularly important as a reflection of the Nation's gratitude and obligation to those who have sacrificed so much in its service.

S. 546, however, extends coverage to all servicemembers who died between October 1, 2000, and March 30, 2001, not just those who died in the performance of duty. Extending $250,000 in SGLI coverage to all servicemembers who died during this period would impose a significant additional cost on the SGLI program. We understand that approximately 627 servicemembers covered by SGLI for the maximum amount died during this period. The cost to the SGLI program as a result of S. 546 would be a payout of some $31 million in insurance proceeds. Since these benefits would not be offset by premiums paid for thiscoverage, the SGLI program would have to absorb the cost. Although we wouldnot anticipate the need for an immediate increase in SGLI premiums to cover thispayout, one consequence of such a payout would likely be to delay any futuredecrease in SGLI or Veterans' Group Life Insurance premiums. The Veterans' Benefits Act of 1992, Pub. L. No. 102568, § 201, 106 Stat.4320, 4324, which was enacted on October 29, 1992, increased the maximumamount of SGLI coverage from $100,000 to $200,000, effective December 1,1992. There were several military fatalities as a result of aircraft crashes betweenOctober 29, 1992, and December 1, 1992. Congress responded by enactingsection 8134 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1994, Pub. L.No. 103139, 107 Stat. 1418, 1471 (1993), authorizing the payment of a deathgratuity to beneficiaries of servicemembers who died in the performance of dutybetween October 29, 1992, and December 1, 1992, generally in the amount of theSGLI coverage the member had in force at the time of his or her death. Congressappropriated funds to cover payment of this gratuity by the Department of Defense.VA believes that aspects of the 1993 legislation represent an approach thatis more financially prudent for the SGLI program. In particular, the 1993 legislationlimited compensation to deaths occurring in performance of duty and did notimpose the cost of the additional benefits on the SGLI program and SGLI insureds. The number of deaths covered by such an approach for the period October 1,2000, through March 30, 2001, would be approximately 75. A $50,000 gratuity forthe families of these deceased servicemembers would cost less than $4 million. VA considers such an approach for compensating the families of deceasedservicemembers who died prior to April 1, 2001, highly desirable and preferable tothat taken by S.546. We also note that S. 546 would only apply to insured servicemembers whodied during a period ending on March 30, 2001, rather than March 31, 2001. Webelieve that the bill's drafter may have intended to cover servicemembers who diedprior to the April 1, 2001, SGLI increase, i.e., during the period ending on March31, 2001. Since the cost of paying the insurance benefits contemplated by S. 546would be borne by the SGLI program, there would be no costs to the Governmentassociated with S. 546. As noted, the cost of the alternative approach of coveringonly servicemembers who died in the performance of duty would be less than $4million, as opposed to the $31 million dollar cost of the bill in its current form. TheSGLI program could absorb the cost of this alternative without impacting futurelevels of premiums in the SGLI and VGLI programs. The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection tothe submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely,

Anthony J. Principi

Mr. WARNER (for himself, Mr. ALLEN, Mr. GRAHAM, and Mr. NELSON of Florida) i ntroduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committe e on Vetrans' Affairs

---

A BILL

To expand the applicability of the increase in the automatic maximum amount of Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance scheduled to take effect on Apr il 1, 2001, to the deaths of certain members of the uniformed services who die before that date.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Un ited States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXPANDED APPLICABILITY OF INCREASE IN AUTOMATIC MAXIMUM COVER AGE UNDER SERVICEMEMBERS' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL- Notwithstanding section 312(c) of the Veterans Benefit s and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000 (Public Law 106-419; 114 Stat. 1854; 38 U.S.C. 1967 note) or any other provision of law, the amount of Servicemember s' Group Life Insurance in force under subchapter III of chapter 19 of title 38 , United States Code, for each individual described in subsection (b) at the ti me of such individual's death as described in that subsection shall be $250,000 .

(b) COVERED INDIVIDUALS- An individual described in this subsection is any individual insured under section 1967 of title 38, United States Code, who --

(1) during the period beginning on October 1, 2000, and ending on March 30, 2001, dies in a manner covered by such insurance; and

(2) at the time of death, had not made an election under that sect ion to be insured in an amount less than automatic maximum amount provided for in that section.

I am not sure we are having this meeting on Wednesday. I asked ARG about this yesterday and he didn't/wouldn't commit one way or the other.

I'll ask again this afternoon.

Thanks!

I would suggest that we have Brett Kavanaugh (also of our office) do the Catholic conference call.

Matthew2:

Wednesday morning at 9 am is the new time for the weekly Catholic teleconference: we want to move on this before the judicial announcement is made tomorrow afternoon. Brad Berenson, of counsel, will fill in all the details on the call to our Catholic supporters.

Also, want to remind everyone that in addition to the 1. CSE meeting yesterday, 2. the weekly conservative teleconference last night, and the 3. 4pm coalition meeting today at CSE, Tim Flannigan will speak at Norquist and Weyrich tomorrow.

One other note: there will be two special teleconferences today at 2pm and 5pm that are being arranged off campus to update key folks about the announcement.

It has shaped up to be a very good coalition week.

Warmly

tsg

Kevin Delaney from the Laura Ingram Show called yesterday wanting the Judge on Thursday or Friday for a 7-10 pm live show.

Ms. Ingram apparently clerked with Brett and Brad from our office at the Supreme Court.

ARG is in Texas Thursday-Sunday so I am not inclined to add this to his schedule.

Their number is 202-457-1770.

Do with this what you will.

Thanks!

Brett-

Notre Dame University would like to create an endowed scholarship in the name of Mrs. Bush. The Scholarship would be awarded to a student enrolled in an elementary or secondary Catholic school in Texas.

The recipient would be chosen from one of the many schools in Texas served by the ACE teachers (these are teacher who have studied at ND and have worked for two years as Catholic School teachers), and would recieve full tuition to their current school for one year.

Notre Dame would like to announce this scholarship in a ceremony to precede the Commencement on 5/20 (POTUS & FLOTUS will be there) - they hope that she can present the award to the first recipient during the ceremony.

Question: Are there any legal issues that surround this, if the First Lady accepts this and it moves forward (we have not brought this to her or her staff - but we need to ASAP)?

Let us know, and thanks

Michael

PROTECT CHILDREN IN YOUR DISTRICT CO-SPONSOR THE

Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act

Original Cosponsor Deadline: Monday May 7, 2001

Dear Colleague:

The FBI and the Customs Service have the formidable task of keeping the Internet safe for children who are often just one mouse click away from meeting a sexual predator on-line. With the development of the Internet, many crimes involving child pornography and enticing juveniles into sex with adults occur over telephone lines which are easily wiretapped for investigation purposes. We need to update the law to give our law enforcement officials the power to wiretap to protect our nation's children from new dangers posed by new technology.

Kidnappers and child molesters are no longer just lingering around playgrounds. They are in Internet chat rooms pretending to be a friend to a young person who is looking for a confidant, someone to talk to. The predators are always more than willing to accommodate and over time, earn the trust to lure young people into meetings that often result in their becoming new victims of sexual assault.

Our bill would create several new predicate offenses for which a federal agent can seek permission to wiretap a suspect. Most of the existing predicate offenses don't reflect the technological advances made in the past few years and thus the new threats to the safety of our children.

For instance, one of the most common means of abuse on the Internet is luring a child into a sexual relationship. Currently, our federal law enforcement agents cannot wiretap the lines of those they suspect of preying on children over the Internet. Our bill adds to the list of predicate offenses enticing or coercing a person to travel within a state, between states or between countries to engage in prostitution or sexual activity, traveling to engage in sex or engage someone else in prostitution and persons producing, distributing or possessing child pornography. A judge would have to approve these wiretaps just as he would those under current law.

If you have questions, or would like to co-sponsor the Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act, please call Jaime Cheshire at 5-4476.

Very truly yours,

Nancy L. Johnson

107TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. _____

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on _____

A BILL

To amend title 18, United States Code, to provide that certain sexual crimes against children are predicate crimes for the interception of communications, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act of 2001".

REV_00126370

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF INTERCEPTION OF COMMUNICATIONS IN THE INVESTIGATION OF SEXUAL CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN.

(a) CHILD PORNOGRAPHY.—Section 2516(1)(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting "section 2252A (relating to material constituting or containing child pornography)," after "2252 (sexual exploitation of children),".

(b) TRANSPORTATION FOR ILLEGAL SEXUAL ACTIVITY.—Section 2516(1) of title 18, United States Code, as amended by section 3 of this Act, is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (o);

(2) by inserting after paragraph (o) the following:

"(p) a violation of section 2422 (relating to coercion and enticement) or section 2423 (relating to transportation of minors) of this title, if, in connection with that violation, the sexual activity for which a person may be charged with a criminal offense would constitute a felony offense under chapter 109A or 110, if that activity took place within the special maritime and territorial jurisdiction of the United States; or"; and

REV_00126371

(3) by redesignating paragraph (p) as paragraph (q).

SEC. 3. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT ELIMINATING DUPLICATIVE PROVISION.

Section 2516(1) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the first paragraph (p); and

(2) by inserting "or" at the end of paragraph (o).

REV_00126372

Treasury Quote to be included in Congresswoman Johnson's press release on Friday, May 11th.

> "The Child Sex Crimes Wiretapping Act is important for law enforcement. It will help the U.S. Customs Service conduct more effective international investigations against people who prey upon children for sexual purposes, particularly those who carry out these crimes over the Internet."

Justice lawyers recommend delay in execution

RON FOURNIER
AP White House Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) _ Justice Department lawyers have recommended that Attorney General John Ashcroft delay the execution of convicted Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh for 30 days, two government officials said Friday.

The officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Attorney General John Ashcroft was expected to approve the request later Friday. The recommendation came one day after the FBI disclosed that it had

failed to turn over documents to McVeigh's defense.

McVeigh, 33, is scheduled to die Wednesday at a federal prison in Terre Haute, Ind.

The belated uncovering of the documents embarrassed the government and angered victims and their families. But it was not immediately clear whether McVeigh _ who had waived appeals in the past few months and claimed responsibility for the bombing _ would himself now seek a delay.

``We needed this death penalty,'' said Aren Almon Kok, whose baby daughter came to symbolize the 1995 blast through a photograph of her lifeless body in the arms of a firefighter.

``For someone to make this mistake ... to find them less than a week before he dies ... is unbelievably unfair,'' she said in Oklahoma City.

The Justice Department handed McVeigh's lawyers 3,135 documents it said should have been provided during the discovery phase of his 1997 trial in Denver. The existence of the documents was disclosed Thursday by CBS.

Kathleen Treanor, who lost her 4-year-old daughter and in-laws in the April 19, 1995, bombing, criticized the FBI as bungling the case and giving McVeigh the chance to extend his life.

``I'm appalled,'' she said. ``The FBI knew from the very beginning that this was a huge case. How could they have possibly made a mistake this huge?''

In a letter to McVeigh's attorneys, the Justice Department said the documents consist of FBI reports, including interview notes known as ''302s,'' and photocopies of physical evidence such as ``photographs, written correspondence and tapes.''

The documents came from 45 FBI offices in the United States and one in Paris.

A lawyer familiar with the case told The Associated Press that the materials contain information generated by thousands of phone calls made to the FBI after the bombing. They range from identifying a composite drawing of a possible suspect known as John Doe No. 2 to claims of seeing McVeigh elsewhere on the day of the bombing.

Legal analysts said the mistake could delay what would be the first federal execution since 1963, though it was unlikely to overturn McVeigh's conviction.

An attorney for McVeigh said the materials may prompt a request for a stay.

``We're considering all our options,'' McVeigh lawyer Nathan Chambers said after the documents were delivered to his office in Denver.

Chambers spoke to McVeigh about the documents, but he declined to elaborate except to say he couldn't rule anything out yet.

Asked Friday on CBS' ``The Early Show'' whether McVeigh would seek a stay, he said: ``The honest question to that is we don't know at this point. There are a number of options that may be available to Mr. McVeigh, and we have a lot of work to do.'' He gave a similar answer when asked if McVeigh would fight if the government sought a stay.

Another McVeigh attorney, Rob Nigh, arrived Thursday night in Indiana.

In a recently published book, McVeigh claimed sole responsibility for the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, which killed 168 people and injured hundreds. Since December, when he first asked to end his appeals, he had not shown any interest in fighting his conviction or death sentence.

McVeigh's trial judge, U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch of Denver, could not be reached for comment. Court clerk James Manspeaker said the defense would have to go to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, also in Denver, to file a motion to consider new evidence.

Matsch planned no action unless an appeal is filed. ``If something is filed he'll take a look at it,'' Manspeaker said.

The legal standard for granting such a motion requires the court to determine the verdict could have been different if the jury had been allowed to see the documents.

``The prosecution proved everything to me,'' said McVeigh juror Doug Carr, 45. ``If there was something left out that's in those files, I don't think it was that significant.''

McVeigh's former trial lawyer, Stephen Jones, said he wouldn't be surprised if the execution was stayed until the documents are reviewed.

``There could be a benign interpretation and it could all be irrelevant,'' Jones said. ``On the other hand, it could be a malignant failure to turn over.''

The Justice Department said the mistake was discovered after an FBI archivist requested bombing-related materials be sent to the Oklahoma field office.

The department asked defense attorneys to notify them if they believe the documents throw McVeigh's guilt into question.

``While the department is confident the documents do not in any way create any reasonable doubt about McVeigh's guilt and do not contradict his repeated confessions of guilt, the department is concerned that McVeigh's attorneys were not able to review them at the appropriate time,'' the agency said.

Chambers, who has worked on McVeigh's case since December 1998, said he learned about the documents Wednesday, when he received a telephone call from Sean Connelly, a prosecutor in the U.S. attorney's office in Denver.

``Here we are a full six years after the bombing and less than a week before Mr. McVeigh's scheduled execution and these reports mysteriously appear. So it's a cause for concern,'' Chambers said.

The lead prosecutor in the trial, Joseph Hartzler, told NBC News that McVeigh is ``a master of self-deception and self-worship.''

``If he wanted the death penalty, he could have stayed in the truck, or walked into the building,'' Hartzler said. ``He doesn't want to die, he's just giving into it because it's inevitable and somehow he thinks this is his way of declaring victory or something.''

The documents also were delivered Thursday to lawyers for co-defendant Terry Nichols, who was convicted of conspiracy and involuntary manslaughter and sentenced to life in prison.

Similar documents formed the basis of a previous, unsuccessful appeal by Nichols, who claimed the papers could have cleared him.

Political Activity Outline

- In general, White House and PAS (Senate-confirmed) officials may engage in political activity, including while on duty and in the office, but the government must be reimbursed for additional costs associated with that activity (that is, the costs beyond what the government otherwise would have incurred).

  - Travel
    (policy against use of corporate aircraft from regulated entities)
    (mixed trips; reimbursement determined by "total activity time") (security costs are official costs)
  - Events in government buildings
    (no fundraising on government property or using government equipment)
    (appearance issues)
  - Equipment
    (incidental costs of paper and wear and tear; check guidance memo)

- For reimbursement purposes, political activity is activity primarily related to an election, a campaign, a political party event, or a political party's operations.

- Other Executive Branch officers and employees (except those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may engage in a wide variety of political activity, but they may do so only while off duty and not on government property.

- The law also recognizes, however, that certain Executive Branch employees who are not themselves White House or PAS officials may be required in the performance of their official duties to accompany or assist White House or PAS officials engaging in political activity (for example, duties related to security, scheduling, or typing). Such assistance is permissible, and the government need not be reimbursed for the compensation and expenses associated with such assistance.

- Except for those in certain investigative and national security agencies, the permissible range of political activities includes:

  - participation in political organizations, which includes:

    - being a member of a political party;
    - serving as an officer of a political party;
    - attending and participating in nominating caucuses;
    - organizing a political party;
    - participating in a political convention or rally; and
    - serving as a delegate to a political convention.

- participation in political campaigns, which includes:

    - displaying political pictures, signs, stickers, or buttons (although employees other than White House and PAS appointees cannot do so while on duty or in their offices);
    - circulating a nominating petition;
    - canvassing for votes;
    - endorsing or opposing a candidate in an advertisement, broadcast, campaign literature, or similar material (so long as one's official title is not used, except for that of the President and Vice President);
    - addressing a convention, caucus, rally, or similar gathering of a political party or political group; and
    - actively managing the political campaign of a partisan political candidate or candidate for political party office.

- participation in elections, including:

    - voting;
    - acting as officer or watcher at a polling place;
    - serving as election judge or clerk; and
    - driving voters to polling places.

- candidacy for election in a non-partisan election, including:

    - running in a non-partisan election (but note that no Executive Branch employee other than the President and Vice President may run as a candidate in a partisan election).

- participation in fundraising:

    Other than the President or Vice President, Executive Branch officers and employees may not solicit, receive, or accept political contributions. However, Executive Branch officers and employees (other than those in certain investigative and national security agencies) may:

    - make political contributions;
    - attend political fundraisers;
    - manage or organize political fundraisers behind the scenes;
    - speak at political fundraisers, so long as one's official title is not used (the term of address "The Honorable" may be used);
    - be listed as a guest speaker on the invitation for a fundraiser, so long as the invitation does not use one's official title (again, the term of address "the Honorable" may be used);
    - solicit, accept, or receive uncompensated volunteer services from any individual, without using one's official title (however, a superior may not ask his or her subordinate employee to provide such services, nor may he or she ask a company or entity with official matters pending before the agency to provide such services).

- Certain kinds of political activities are forbidden, including:
    - no soliciting, accepting, or receiving political contributions, except by President and Vice President (but officials may organize, manage, appear at, and speak at fundraisers)
    - no fundraising on government property or using government equipment
    - official's name cannot appear on an invitation as a "sponsor" of a fundraiser, but can be identified as a guest speaker
    - official's title cannot be used in connection with political events, but can use "The Honorable"
    - general misuse of official authority
        - cannot ask regulated entities or those under investigation to engage in political activities; however, one can speak to a diverse group that includes individuals within those categories
        - cannot ask subordinates to engage in political activity; however, superiors and subordinates may interact on political matters when both are involved in same political activity or organization
    - cannot run as a candidate in a partisan election

After these 34 circuit vacancies are accounted for, we should divvy up the circuits for future vacancies, so that it is not a food fight among the group each time. With 12 regional circuits and 8 attorneys, I think that 4 of us should get 2 circuits each and that 4 of us (the 4 most junior) should get 1 circuit each. (In addition, there is the federal circuit, although I would treat that circuit like a district court for these purposes.) Think about how we should do this. Some kind of regularized procedure established in advance will probably make it easier and fairer, as I believe has already occurred for district court vacancies.

Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms: Questions for the Record

At page 17 of the Director's testimony, you note that, in October 1998, the ATF adopted a focused inspection policy that steers more investigative resources toward problematic Federal Firearms Licensees (FFLs). I believe that the focused inspections policy is a good one and that it is working well.

Question H331: Do you have all of the legal authority that you believe that you need to address the problems that you encounter in your interactions with these problem FFL's or do you need additional legal authority?

Answer: Generally yes, however, under current law, the only civil remedy available for licensee violations (with the limited exception of a provision specific to certain Brady Act violations) is license revocation. Revocation of a license is not necessarily appropriate for every type of licensee violation. License suspensions and civil penalties authority would allow more discretion in licensee administrative actions.

Question H332: If you need additional authority, what legislative recommendations will you be proposing to deal with problem FFL's?

Answer: As stated previously, license suspensions and civil penalties authority would allow more discretion in licensee administrative actions.

White House Memo Sets Procedures
For Complying With Law on Vacancies

Despite early problems with filling vacancies in top-level government positions, the Bush administration is taking steps to comply with the 1998 law that limits the length of time that jobs can be filled by an "acting" official.

A White House memorandum sent in late March to the heads of all federal departments and agencies sets forth the first formal process for compliance with the 1998 Vacancies Reform Act, according to officials familiar with the law's requirements.

The memo from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales directs that the general counsel of each agency is responsible for determining which positions are subject to the requirements of the Vacancies Act. The general counsel or agency head then is responsible for determining which covered positions are vacant, and for which of the positions acting officers have been designated or nominations have been submitted to the Senate. Standard reporting forms prepared by the General Accounting Office should be completed for all vacancies and submitted immediately to Congress and the GAO, the White House memo says.

The GAO is responsible for monitoring compliance with the Vacancies Act. The White House memo recently was provided to BNA by an official at the GAO.

The Vacancies Act was adopted by Congress to provide rules governing the designation of officials serving temporarily in nearly 500 top government jobs that require a presidential nomination and Senate confirmation. In most cases, the law limits temporary appointments to these top-level, executive branch jobs to no more than 300 days in a new presidential administration.

With the advent of the Bush administration, hundreds of top-level federal jobs have not yet been filled by presidential appointments. According to news reports, the Bush White House has moved more slowly than other recent administrations to fill positions below the Cabinet level. The administration could face a deadline of mid-November to fill these jobs under the Vacancies Act.

A February GAO letter to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee outlined the requirements of the Vacancies Reform Act. GAO said that, if the president has made no nomination of someone to hold the job permanently by the 300-day deadline, an acting official may be legally barred from continuing in his or her post. Exceptions to this requirement include appointments to federal commissions, such as the Federal Election Commission and the Federal Communications Commission.

The law also sets specific eligibility requirements for persons filling presidentially-appointed positions on a temporary basis.

Subject: Release of names on California bipartisan selection committees

By the end of this week, the lists of Republican and Democratic members of the California bipartisan judicial selection committees for district courts will be finalized. Some sort of announcement of the membership is probably in order. We (the White House) could do some sort of a joint press release with the Democratic Senators, we could provide the lists to a couple favored reporters out in California, we could have Gerry Parsky provide the information to the press either orally on in writing, or we could do nothing and leave it to the Senators.

Would you please advise us on how, if at all, you would like this announcement to be made when it's ready? Thanks very much.

107TH CONGRESS

H. R. 617

To express the policy of the United States regarding the United States relationship with Native Hawaiians, to provide a process for the reorganization of a Native Hawaiian government and the recognition by the United States of the Native Hawaiian government, and for other purposes.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FEBRUARY 14, 2001

Mr. ABERCROMBIE (for himself, Mrs. MINK of Hawaii, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. HANSEN, and Mr. RAHALL) introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Resources

A BILL

To express the policy of the United States regarding the United States relationship with Native Hawaiians, to provide a process for the reorganization of a Native Hawaiian government and the recognition by the United States of the Native Hawaiian government, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

REV_00126433

(1) The Constitution vests Congress with the authority to address the conditions of the indigenous, native people of the United States.

(2) Native Hawaiians, the native people of the Hawaiian archipelago which is now part of the United States, are indigenous, native people of the United States.

(3) The United States has a special trust relationship to promote the welfare of the native people of the United States, including Native Hawaiians.

(4) Under the treaty making power of the United States, Congress exercised its constitutional authority to confirm a treaty between the United States and the government that represented the Hawaiian people, and from 1826 until 1893, the United States recognized the independence of the Kingdom of Hawaii, extended full diplomatic recognition to the Hawaiian government, and entered into treaties and conventions with the Hawaiian monarchs to govern commerce and navigation in 1826, 1842, 1849, 1875, and 1887.

(5) Pursuant to the provisions of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920 (42 Stat. 108, chapter 42), the United States set aside 203,500 acres of land in the Federal territory that later became the State of Hawaii to address the conditions of Native Hawaiians.

(6) By setting aside 203,500 acres of land for Native Hawaiian homesteads and farms, the Act assists the Native Hawaiian community in maintaining distinct native settlements throughout the State of Hawaii.

(7) Approximately 6,800 Native Hawaiian lessees and their family members reside on Hawaiian Home Lands and approximately 18,000 Native Hawaiians who are eligible to reside on the Home Lands are on a waiting list to receive assignments of land.

(8) In 1959, as part of the compact admitting Hawaii into the United States, Congress established the Ceded Lands Trust for 5 purposes, 1 of which is the betterment of the conditions of Native Hawaiians. Such trust consists of approximately 1,800,000 acres of land, submerged lands, and the revenues derived from such lands, the assets of which have never been completely inventoried or segregated.

(9) Throughout the years, Native Hawaiians have repeatedly sought access to the Ceded Lands Trust and its resources and revenues in order to establish and maintain native settlements and distinct native communities throughout the State.

(10) The Hawaiian Home Lands and the Ceded Lands provide an important foundation for the ability of the Native Hawaiian community to maintain the practice of Native Hawaiian culture, language, and traditions, and for the survival of the Native Hawaiian people.

(11) Native Hawaiians have maintained other distinctly native areas in Hawaii.

(12) On November 23, 1993, Public Law 103–150 (107 Stat. 1510) (commonly known as the Apology Resolution) was enacted into law, extending an apology on behalf of the United States to the Native people of Hawaii for the United States role in the overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawaii.

(13) The Apology Resolution acknowledges that the overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawaii occurred with the active participation of agents and citizens of the United States and further acknowledges that the Native Hawaiian people never directly relinquished their claims to their inherent sovereignty as a people over their national lands to the United States, either through their monarchy or through a plebiscite or referendum.

REV_00126436

(14) The Apology Resolution expresses the commitment of Congress and the President to acknowledge the ramifications of the overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawaii and to support reconciliation efforts between the United States and Native Hawaiians; and to have Congress and the President, through the President's designated officials, consult with Native Hawaiians on the reconciliation process as called for under the Apology Resolution.

(15) Despite the overthrow of the Hawaiian government, Native Hawaiians have continued to maintain their separate identity as a distinct native community through the formation of cultural, social, and political institutions, and to give expression to their rights as native people to self-determination and self-governance as evidenced through their participation in the Office of Hawaiian Affairs.

(16) Native Hawaiians also maintain a distinct Native Hawaiian community through the provision of governmental services to Native Hawaiians, including the provision of health care services, educational programs, employment and training programs, children's services, conservation programs, fish and wildlife protection, agricultural programs, native language immersion programs and native language immersion schools from kindergarten through high school, as well as college and master's degree programs in native language immersion instruction, and traditional justice programs, and by continuing their efforts to enhance Native Hawaiian self-determination and local control.

(17) Native Hawaiians are actively engaged in Native Hawaiian cultural practices, traditional agricultural methods, fishing and subsistence practices, maintenance of cultural use areas and sacred sites, protection of burial sites, and the exercise of their traditional rights to gather medicinal plants and herbs, and food sources.

(18) The Native Hawaiian people wish to preserve, develop, and transmit to future Native Hawaiian generations their ancestral lands and Native Hawaiian political and cultural identity in accordance with their traditions, beliefs, customs and practices, language, and social and political institutions, and to achieve greater self-determination over their own affairs.

(19) This Act provides for a process within the framework of Federal law for the Native Hawaiian people to exercise their inherent rights as a distinct aboriginal, indigenous, native community to reorganize a Native Hawaiian government for the purpose of giving expression to their rights as native people to self-determination and self-governance.

(20) The United States has declared that—

(A) the United States has a special responsibility for the welfare of the native peoples of the United States, including Native Hawaiians;

(B) Congress has identified Native Hawaiians as a distinct indigenous group within the scope of its Indian affairs power, and has enacted dozens of statutes on their behalf pursuant to its recognized trust responsibility; and

(C) Congress has also delegated broad authority to administer a portion of the Federal trust responsibility to the State of Hawaii.

(21) The United States has recognized and reaffirmed the special trust relationship with the Native Hawaiian people through the enactment of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union", approved March 18, 1959 (Public Law 86–3; 73 Stat. 4) by—

(A) ceding to the State of Hawaii title to the public lands formerly held by the United States, and mandating that those lands be held in public trust for 5 purposes, one of which is for the betterment of the conditions of Native Hawaiians; and

(B) transferring the United States responsibility for the administration of the Hawaiian Home Lands to the State of Hawaii, but retaining the authority to enforce the trust, including the exclusive right of the United States to consent to any actions affecting the lands which comprise the corpus of the trust and any amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920 (42 Stat. 108, chapter 42) that are enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii affecting the beneficiaries under the Act.

(22) The United States continually has recognized and reaffirmed that—

(A) Native Hawaiians have a cultural, historic, and land-based link to the aboriginal, native people who exercised sovereignty over the Hawaiian Islands;

(B) Native Hawaiians have never relinquished their claims to sovereignty or their sovereign lands;

(C) the United States extends services to Native Hawaiians because of their unique status as the aboriginal, native people of a once sovereign nation with whom the United States has a political and legal relationship; and

REV_00126440

(D) the special trust relationship of American Indians, Alaska Natives, and Native Hawaiians to the United States arises out of their status as aboriginal, indigenous, native people of the United States.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) ABORIGINAL, INDIGENOUS, NATIVE PEOPLE.—The term ''aboriginal, indigenous, native people'' means those people whom Congress has recognized as the original inhabitants of the lands and who exercised sovereignty prior to European contact in the areas that later became part of the United States.

(2) ADULT MEMBERS.—The term ''adult members'' means those Native Hawaiians who have attained the age of 18 at the time the Secretary publishes the final roll, as provided in section 7(a)(3) of this Act.

(3) APOLOGY RESOLUTION.—The term ''Apology Resolution'' means Public Law 103–150 (107 Stat. 1510), a joint resolution offering an apology to

REV_00126441

Native Hawaiians on behalf of the United States for the participation of agents of the United States in the January 17, 1893 overthrow of the Kingdom of Hawaii.

(4) CEDED LANDS.—The term ''ceded lands'' means those lands which were ceded to the United States by the Republic of Hawaii under the Joint Resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States of July 7, 1898 (30 Stat. 750), and which were later transferred to the State of Hawaii in the Act entitled ''An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union'' approved March 18, 1959 (Public Law 86–3; 73 Stat. 4).

(5) COMMISSION.—The term ''Commission'' means the commission established in section 7 of this Act to certify that the adult members of the Native Hawaiian community contained on the roll developed under that section meet the definition of Native Hawaiian, as defined in paragraph (7)(A).

(6) INDIGENOUS, NATIVE PEOPLE.—The term ''indigenous, native people'' means the lineal descendants of the aboriginal, indigenous, native people of the United States.

(7) NATIVE HAWAIIAN.—

REV_00126442

(A) Prior to the recognition by the United States of a Native Hawaiian government under the authority of section 7(d)(2) of this Act, the term ''Native Hawaiian'' means the indigenous, native people of Hawaii who are the lineal descendants of the aboriginal, indigenous, native people who resided in the islands that now comprise the State of Hawaii on or before January 1, 1893, and who occupied and exercised sovereignty in the Hawaiian archipelago, including the area that now constitutes the State of Hawaii, and includes all Native Hawaiians who were eligible in 1921 for the programs authorized by the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act (42 Stat. 108, chapter 42) and their lineal descendants.

(B) Following the recognition by the United States of the Native Hawaiian government under section 7(d)(2) of this Act, the term ''Native Hawaiian'' shall have the meaning given to such term in the organic governing documents of the Native Hawaiian government.

(8) NATIVE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT.—The term ''Native Hawaiian government'' means the citizens of the government of the Native Hawaiian people that is recognized by the United States under the authority of section 7(d)(2) of this Act.

(9) NATIVE HAWAIIAN INTERIM GOVERNING COUNCIL.—The term ''Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council'' means the interim governing council that is organized under section 7(c) of this Act.

(10) ROLL.—The term ''roll'' means the roll that is developed under the authority of section 7(a) of this Act.

(11) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(12) TASK FORCE.—The term ''Task Force'' means the Native Hawaiian Interagency Task Force established under the authority of section 6 of this Act.

SEC. 3. UNITED STATES POLICY AND PURPOSE.

(a) POLICY.—The United States reaffirms that—

(1) Native Hawaiians are a unique and distinct aboriginal, indigenous, native people, with whom the United States has a political and legal relationship;

(2) the United States has a special trust relationship to promote the welfare of Native Hawaiians;

(3) Congress possesses the authority under the Constitution to enact legislation to address the conditions of Native Hawaiians and has exercised this authority through the enactment of—

REV_00126444

(A) the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920 (42 Stat. 108, chapter 42);

(B) the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union", approved March 18, 1959 (Public Law 86–3; 73 Stat. 4); and

(C) more than 150 other Federal laws addressing the conditions of Native Hawaiians;

(4) Native Hawaiians have—

(A) an inherent right to autonomy in their internal affairs;

(B) an inherent right of self-determination and self-governance;

(C) the right to reorganize a Native Hawaiian government; and

(D) the right to become economically self-sufficient; and

(5) the United States shall continue to engage in a process of reconciliation and political relations with the Native Hawaiian people.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the intent of Congress that the purpose of this Act is to provide a process for the reorganization of a Native Hawaiian government and for the recognition by the United States of the Native Hawaiian government for purposes of continuing a government-to-government relationship.

SEC. 4. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OFFICE FOR NATIVE HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established within the Office of the Secretary the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs.

(b) DUTIES OF THE OFFICE.—The United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs shall—

(1) effectuate and coordinate the special trust relationship between the Native Hawaiian people and the United States through the Secretary, and with all other Federal agencies;

(2) upon the recognition of the Native Hawaiian government by the United States as provided for in section 7(d)(2) of this Act, effectuate and coordinate the special trust relationship between the Native Hawaiian government and the United States through the Secretary, and with all other Federal agencies;

(3) fully integrate the principle and practice of meaningful, regular, and appropriate consultation with the Native Hawaiian people by providing timely notice to, and consulting with the Native Hawaiian people prior to taking any actions that may affect traditional or current Native Hawaiian practices and matters that may have the potential to significantly or uniquely affect Native Hawaiian resources, rights, or lands, and upon the recognition of the Native Hawaiian government as provided for in section 7(d)(2) of this Act, fully integrate the principle and practice of meaningful, regular, and appropriate consultation with the Native Hawaiian government by providing timely notice to, and consulting with the Native Hawaiian people and the Native Hawaiian government prior to taking any actions that may have the potential to significantly affect Native Hawaiian resources, rights, or lands;

(4) consult with the Native Hawaiian Interagency Task Force, other Federal agencies, and with relevant agencies of the State of Hawaii on policies, practices, and proposed actions affecting Native Hawaiian resources, rights, or lands;

(5) be responsible for the preparation and submittal to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate, and the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives of an annual report detailing the activities of the Interagency

Task Force established under section 6 of this Act that are undertaken with respect to the continuing process of reconciliation and to effect meaningful consultation with the Native Hawaiian people and the Native Hawaiian government and providing recommendations for any necessary changes to existing Federal statutes or regulations promulgated under the authority of Federal law;

(6) be responsible for continuing the process of reconciliation with the Native Hawaiian people, and upon the recognition of the Native Hawaiian government by the United States as provided for in section 7(d)(2) of this Act, be responsible for continuing the process of reconciliation with the Native Hawaiian government; and

(7) assist the Native Hawaiian people in facilitating a process for self-determination, including but not limited to the provision of technical assistance in the development of the roll under section 7(a) of this Act, the organization of the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council as provided for in section 7(c) of this Act, and the recognition of the Native Hawaiian government as provided for in section 7(d) of this Act.

REV_00126448

(c) AUTHORITY.—The United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs is authorized to enter into a contract with or make grants for the purposes of the activities authorized or addressed in section 7 of this Act for a period of 3 years from the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. DESIGNATION OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE REPRESENTATIVE.

The Attorney General shall designate an appropriate official within the Department of Justice to assist the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs in the implementation and protection of the rights of Native Hawaiians and their political, legal, and trust relationship with the United States, and upon the recognition of the Native Hawaiian government as provided for in section 7(d)(2) of this Act, in the implementation and protection of the rights of the Native Hawaiian government and its political, legal, and trust relationship with the United States.

SEC. 6. NATIVE HAWAIIAN INTERAGENCY TASK FORCE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established an interagency task force to be known as the ''Native Hawaiian Interagency Task Force''.

(b) COMPOSITION.—The Task Force shall be composed of officials, to be designated by the President, from—

REV_00126449

(1) each Federal agency that establishes or implements policies that affect Native Hawaiians or whose actions may significantly or uniquely impact on Native Hawaiian resources, rights, or lands;

(2) the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs established under section 4 of this Act; and

(3) the Executive Office of the President.

(c) LEAD AGENCIES.—The Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice shall serve as the lead agencies of the Task Force, and meetings of the Task Force shall be convened at the request of either of the lead agencies.

(d) CO-CHAIRS.—The Task Force representative of the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs established under the authority of section 4 of this Act and the Attorney General's designee under the authority of section 5 of this Act shall serve as co-chairs of the Task Force.

(e) DUTIES.—The responsibilities of the Task Force shall be—

(1) the coordination of Federal policies that affect Native Hawaiians or actions by any agency or agencies of the Federal Government which may significantly or uniquely impact on Native Hawaiian resources, rights, or lands;

REV_00126450

(2) to assure that each Federal agency develops a policy on consultation with the Native Hawaiian people, and upon recognition of the Native Hawaiian government by the United States as provided in section 7(d)(2) of this Act, consultation with the Native Hawaiian government; and

(3) to assure the participation of each Federal agency in the development of the report to Congress authorized in section 4(b)(5) of this Act.

SEC. 7. PROCESS FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF A ROLL FOR THE ORGANIZATION OF A NATIVE HAWAIIAN INTERIM GOVERNING COUNCIL, FOR THE ORGANIZATION OF A NATIVE HAWAIIAN INTERIM GOVERNING COUNCIL AND A NATIVE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT, AND FOR THE RECOGNITION OF THE NATIVE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT.

(a) ROLL.—

(1) PREPARATION OF ROLL.—The United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs shall assist the adult members of the Native Hawaiian community who wish to participate in the reorganization of a Native Hawaiian government in preparing a roll for the purpose of the organization of a Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council. The roll shall include the names of the—

REV_00126451

(A) adult members of the Native Hawaiian community who wish to become citizens of a Native Hawaiian government and who are—

(i) the lineal descendants of the aboriginal, indigenous, native people who resided in the islands that now comprise the State of Hawaii on or before January 1, 1893, and who occupied and exercised sovereignty in the Hawaiian archipelago; or

(ii) Native Hawaiians who were eligible in 1921 for the programs authorized by the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act (42 Stat. 108, chapter 42) or their lineal descendants; and

(B) the children of the adult members listed on the roll prepared under this subsection.

(2) CERTIFICATION AND SUBMISSION.—

(A) COMMISSION.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be established a Commission to be composed of 9 members for the purpose of certifying that the adult members of the Native Hawaiian community on the roll meet the definition of Native Hawaiian, as defined in section 2(7)(A) of this Act.

REV_00126452

(ii) MEMBERSHIP.—

(I) APPOINTMENT.—The Secretary shall appoint the members of the Commission in accordance with subclause (II). Any vacancy on the Commission shall not affect its powers and shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

(II) REQUIREMENTS.—The members of the Commission shall be Native Hawaiian, as defined in section 2(7)(A) of this Act, and shall have expertise in the certification of Native Hawaiian ancestry.

(III) CONGRESSIONAL SUBMISSION OF SUGGESTED CANDIDATES.—In appointing members of the Commission, the Secretary may choose such members from among—

(aa) five suggested candidates submitted by the Majority Leader of the Senate and the

REV_00126453

Minority Leader of the Senate from a list of candidates provided to such leaders by the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate; and

(bb) four suggested candidates submitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Minority Leader of the House of Representatives from a list provided to the Speaker and the Minority Leader by the Chairman and Ranking member of the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives.

(iii) EXPENSES.—Each member of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, at rates authorized for employees of agencies under subchapter I of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission.

REV_00126454

(B) CERTIFICATION.—The Commission shall certify that the individuals listed on the roll developed under the authority of this subsection are Native Hawaiians, as defined in section 2(7)(A) of this Act.

(3) SECRETARY.—

(A) CERTIFICATION.—The Secretary shall review the Commission's certification of the membership roll and determine whether it is consistent with applicable Federal law, including the special trust relationship between the United States and the indigenous, native people of the United States.

(B) PUBLICATION.—Upon making the determination authorized in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall publish a final roll.

(C) APPEAL.—

(i) ESTABLISHMENT OF MECHANISM.—The Secretary is authorized to establish a mechanism for an appeal of the Commission's determination as it concerns—

(I) the exclusion of the name of a person who meets the definition of

REV_00126455

Native Hawaiian, as defined in section 2(7)(A) of this Act, from the roll; or

(II) a challenge to the inclusion of the name of a person on the roll on the grounds that the person does not meet the definition of Native Hawaiian, as so defined.

(ii) PUBLICATION; UPDATE.—The Secretary shall publish the final roll while appeals are pending, and shall update the final roll and the publication of the final roll upon the final disposition of any appeal.

(D) FAILURE TO ACT.—If the Secretary fails to make the certification authorized in subparagraph (A) within 90 days of the date that the Commission submits the membership roll to the Secretary, the certification shall be deemed to have been made, and the Commission shall publish the final roll.

(4) EFFECT OF PUBLICATION.—The publication of the final roll shall serve as the basis for the eligibility of adult members listed on the roll to participate in all referenda and elections associated with the organization of a Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council and the Native Hawaiian government.

(b) RECOGNITION OF RIGHTS.—The right of the Native Hawaiian people to organize for their common welfare and to adopt appropriate organic governing documents is hereby recognized by the United States.

(c) ORGANIZATION OF THE NATIVE HAWAIIAN INTERIM GOVERNING COUNCIL.—

(1) ORGANIZATION.—The adult members listed on the roll developed under the authority of subsection (a) are authorized to—

(A) develop criteria for candidates to be elected to serve on the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council;

(B) determine the structure of the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council; and

(C) elect members to the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council.

(2) ELECTION.—Upon the request of the adult members listed on the roll developed under the authority of subsection (a), the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs may assist the Native Hawaiian community in holding an election by secret ballot (absentee and mail balloting permitted), to elect the membership of the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council.

(3) POWERS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to represent those on the roll in the implementation of this Act and shall have no powers other than those given to it in accordance with this Act.

(B) FUNDING.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to enter into a contract or grant with any Federal agency, including but not limited to, the United States Office for Native Hawaiian Affairs within the Department of the Interior and the Administration for Native Americans within the Department of Health and Human Services, to carry out the activities set forth in subparagraph (C).

(C) ACTIVITIES.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to conduct a referendum of the adult members listed on the roll developed under the authority of subsection (a) for the purpose of determining (but not limited to) the following:

REV_00126458

(I) The proposed elements of the organic governing documents of a Native Hawaiian government.

(II) The proposed powers and authorities to be exercised by a Native Hawaiian government, as well as the proposed privileges and immunities of a Native Hawaiian government.

(III) The proposed civil rights and protection of such rights of the citizens of a Native Hawaiian government and all persons subject to the authority of a Native Hawaiian government.

(ii) DEVELOPMENT OF ORGANIC GOVERNING DOCUMENTS.—Based upon the referendum, the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to develop proposed organic governing documents for a Native Hawaiian government.

(iii) DISTRIBUTION.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to distribute to all adult members of those listed on the roll, a copy of the proposed organic governing documents, as drafted by the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council, along with a brief impartial description of the proposed organic governing documents.

(iv) CONSULTATION.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to freely consult with those members listed on the roll concerning the text and description of the proposed organic governing documents.

(D) ELECTIONS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council is authorized to hold elections for the purpose of ratifying the proposed organic governing documents, and upon ratification of the organic governing documents, to hold elections for the officers of the Native Hawaiian government.

(ii) ASSISTANCE.—Upon the request of the Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council, the United States Office of Native

REV_00126460

Hawaiian Affairs may assist the Council in conducting such elections.

(4) TERMINATION.—The Native Hawaiian Interim Governing Council shall have no power or authority under this Act after the time at which the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government take office.

(d) RECOGNITION OF THE NATIVE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT.—

(1) PROCESS FOR RECOGNITION.—

(A) SUBMITTAL OF ORGANIC GOVERNING DOCUMENTS.—The duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government shall submit the organic governing documents of the Native Hawaiian government to the Secretary.

(B) CERTIFICATIONS.—Within 90 days of the date that the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government submit the organic governing documents to the Secretary, the Secretary shall certify that the organic governing documents—

(i) were adopted by a majority vote of the adult members listed on the roll prepared under the authority of subsection (a);

REV_00126461

(ii) are consistent with applicable Federal law and the special trust relationship between the United States and the indigenous native people of the United States;

(iii) provide for the exercise of those governmental authorities that are recognized by the United States as the powers and authorities that are exercised by other governments representing the indigenous, native people of the United States;

(iv) provide for the protection of the civil rights of the citizens of the Native Hawaiian government and all persons subject to the authority of the Native Hawaiian government, and to assure that the Native Hawaiian government exercises its authority consistent with the requirements of section 202 of the Act of April 11, 1968 (25 U.S.C. 1302);

(v) prevent the sale, disposition, lease, or encumbrance of lands, interests in lands, or other assets of the Native Hawaiian government without the consent of the Native Hawaiian government;

REV_00126462

(vi) establish the criteria for citizenship in the Native Hawaiian government; and

(vii) provide authority for the Native Hawaiian government to negotiate with Federal, State, and local governments, and other entities.

(C) FAILURE TO ACT.—If the Secretary fails to act within 90 days of the date that the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government submitted the organic governing documents of the Native Hawaiian government to the Secretary, the certifications authorized in subparagraph (B) shall be deemed to have been made.

(D) RESUBMISSION IN CASE OF NONCOMPLIANCE WITH FEDERAL LAW.—

(i) RESUBMISSION BY THE SECRETARY.—If the Secretary determines that the organic governing documents, or any part thereof, are not consistent with applicable Federal law, the Secretary shall resubmit the organic governing documents to the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government along with a justification for each of the Secretary's findings as to why the provisions are not consistent with such law.

(ii) AMENDMENT AND RESUBMISSION BY THE NATIVE HAWAIIAN GOVERNMENT.—If the organic governing documents are resubmitted to the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government by the Secretary under clause (i), the duly elected officers of the Native Hawaiian government shall—

(I) amend the organic governing documents to ensure that the documents comply with applicable Federal law; and

(II) resubmit the amended organic governing documents to the Secretary for certification in accordance with subparagraphs (B) and (C).

(2) FEDERAL RECOGNITION.—

(A) RECOGNITION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, upon the election of the officers of the Native Hawaiian government and the certifications (or deemed certifications) by the Secretary authorized in paragraph (1), Federal recognition is hereby extended to the Native Hawaiian government as the representative governing body of the Native Hawaiian people.

REV_00126464

(B) NO DIMINISHMENT OF RIGHTS OR PRIVILEGES.—Nothing contained in this Act shall diminish, alter, or amend any existing rights or privileges enjoyed by the Native Hawaiian people which are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the activities authorized in this Act.

SEC. 9. REAFFIRMATION OF DELEGATION OF FEDERAL AUTHORITY; NEGOTIATIONS.

(a) REAFFIRMATION.—The delegation by the United States of authority to the State of Hawaii to address the conditions of Native Hawaiians contained in the Act entitled ''An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union'' approved March 18, 1959 (Public Law 86–3; 73 Stat. 5) is hereby reaffirmed.

(b) NEGOTIATIONS.—Upon the Federal recognition of the Native Hawaiian government pursuant to section 7(d)(2) of this Act, the United States is authorized to negotiate and enter into an agreement with the State of Hawaii and the Native Hawaiian government regarding the transfer of lands, resources, and assets dedicated to Native Hawaiian use under existing law as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act to the Native Hawaiian government.

SEC. 10. DISCLAIMER.

Nothing in this Act is intended to serve as a settlement of any claims against the United States, or to affect the rights of the Native Hawaiian people under international law.

SEC. 11. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary is authorized to make such rules and regulations and such delegations of authority as the Secretary deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 12. SEVERABILITY.

In the event that any section or provision of this Act, or any amendment made by this Act is held invalid, it is the intent of Congress that the remaining sections or provisions of this Act, and the amendments made by this Act, shall continue in full force and effect.

If you have one of the first 11 nominees, please call and tell him or her not to fill out the ABA questionnaire, as we have communicated to the ABA our view that the Senate questionnaire will suffice for the needs of the ABA or any other group. (The ABA agrees.) As to interviews by the ABA, tell the nominees that our policy is not yet decided.

If by "contact info" you are referring to either 3d party supporters or contact info for the nominee himself or herself, that is covered on the spreadsheet I sent around, and Brent and Jason are aware that they need to collect it. If you mean something else, please explain, because I am not sure what you would be referring to.

Subject: URGENT: FINAL CLEARANCE- SAP- H.R. 1836- Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act

Here is the SAP on H.R. 1836 for your clearance. Most of you have responded with sign off to the original version that was sent around by Lisa Macevic in LRD. However, Treasury has added a paragraph- which is really just a talking point- therefore, please respond to me ASAP, and no later than 12:30 pm, TODAY. This bill will be considered on the floor of the House today, possibly as early as 12:30-1 pm. FYI- The text of the bill is the same as the text of H.R. 3 - except that this bill is designated as a reconciliation bill. If you have any questions, please call me (54790).
Thanks,
Danielle

DRAFT – DO NOT RELEASE1

May 16, 2001
(House)

H.R. 1836 – Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001
(Rep. Thomas (R) California)

The Administration supports House passage of H.R. 1836 as a positive step on the way to passage of the President's tax relief plan. By reducing marginal tax rates, this bill would reduce the penalty on work, savings, and investment, begin the process of providing much needed immediate tax relief to the American people, and lay a foundation for further long-term economic growth.
par
No one should be forced to pay more than a third of what they earn in taxes. In fact, 77 percent of the tax relief associated with cutting the top rate in H.R. 1836 would go to small business owners and entrepreneurs – the engines of growth in our economy.

The Administration looks forward to working with Congress through the legislative process to achieve a result that best embodies the objectives and priorities of the President's plan.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Accordingly, H.R. 1836 or any substitute amendment in lieu thereof, that would also reduce revenues, will be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur under current law or the enactment of any other proposals that meet the President's objectives to reduce the debt, fund priority initiatives, and grant tax relief to all income tax paying Americans.

* * * * * *

(Do Not Distribute Outside the Executive Office of the President)

This Statement of Administration Policy was developed by the Legislative Reference Division (Kho), in consultation with the Department of the Treasury (Chris Smith), WH Counsel (Kavanaugh), OVP (Conda), and CEA (Furchtgott-Roth).

The following did not respond to our request for views: WH/LA, NEC, EP, BRD, EIML, and HTF.

OMB/LA Clearance:

Administration Position to Date

H.R. 1836 is identical to H.R. 3, the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Act of 2001, which was passed by the House on March 8, 2001. A Statement of Administration Policy on H.R. 3 was sent to the House on March 8, 2001, stating that the Administration supports the bill as a "very positive first step" to achieving the objectives of the President's tax relief plan.

Summary of H.R. 1836

H.R. 1836 would create a new initial income tax rate bracket and consolidate the five current income tax rates into four by 2006.

New Low Income Tax Rate Bracket. H.R. 1836 would create a new income tax bracket for a portion of taxable income that is currently taxed at 15 percent. The new initial bracket would cover taxable income up to $6,000 for single individuals, up to $10,000 for heads of households, and up to $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns. The lower rate for the new bracket would be phased in as follows:

-- for taxable years beginning in calendar years 2001 and 2002, 12 percent;
-- for taxable years beginning in calendar years 2003, 2004, and 2005, 11 percent; and
-- for taxable years beginning in calendar year 2006, 10 percent.

The taxable income levels for the new low-rate bracket would be adjusted annually for inflation for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2006.

The current 15-percent income tax bracket would be adjusted to start at the end of the new low-rate income tax bracket. The 15-percent income tax bracket would end at the same level as under current law. (Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$4.9 billion; FY 2002: -$36.3 billion; FYs 2001-2005: -$172.9 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$374.9 billion.)

Reduction of Other Tax Rates and Consolidation of Rate Brackets plain . Beginning in calendar year 2002, H.R. 1836 would begin to phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates. H.R. 1836 would consolidate the number of rate brackets from five (15 percent, 28 percent, 31 percent, 36 percent, and 39.6 percent) to four by calendar year 2006.

H.R. 1836 would phase down the current income tax rates of 28 percent and 31 percent to 25 percent over five years. The taxable income level for the new 25-percent rate bracket would begin at the level at which the 28-percent rate bracket begins under the current law and end at the level at which the 31-percent rate bracket ends under the current law.

H.R. 1836 would phase down the current income tax rates of 36 percent and 39.6 percent to 33 percent over five years. The taxable income level for the new 33-percent rate bracket would begin at the level at which the 36-percent rate bracket begins under the current law.r
The table below shows the schedule for the income tax rate reductions.

For taxable years beginning during calendar year: 956 brdrs	The corresponding percentages would be substituted for the following percentages:
	39.6%
	3 6 %
2002	27%	30%	35%	38%
2003	27%	29%	35%	37%
2004	26%	28%	34%	36%
2005	26%	27%	34%	35%

(Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY2002: -$11.7 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$165.1 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$499.8 billion.)

Other Provisions of H.R. 1836. The bill would repeal the current-law provisions that offset the refundable child credit (for families with three or more children) and the earned income credit by the amount of the alternative minimum tax (AMT) for taxpayers subject to the AMT. (Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$45 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$1.7 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$7.3 billion.)

The bill would also specify that transfers of income taxes to any of the trust funds under the Social Security Act would continue as under current law. This provision of the bill would ensure that the long-term financial condition of the Social Security and Medicare trust funds would not be affected by enactment of the bill.

H.R. 1836 would require the Treasury to implement regulations revising wage withholding tables to reflect the rate reduction for calendar year 2001 such that the tables could be applied to amounts paid after the 60th day following enactment of this bill.
Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

As noted above, H.R. 1836 is identical to H.R. 3. According to BASD (Barth), H.R. 3 could affect receipts; therefore, it would be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Treasury Department estimates that H.R. 3 would have a net budget cost of $4.9 billion in FY 2001, $48.0 billion in FY 2002, $339.8 billion over six years, FY 2001-2006, and $881.9 billion over eleven years, FY 2001-2011.r

May 16, 2001
(House)

H.R. 1836 – Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001

(Rep. Thomas (R) California)

The Administration supports House passage of H.R. 1836 as a positive step on the way to passage of the President's tax relief plan. By reducing marginal tax rates, this bill would reduce the penalty on work, savings, and investment, begin the process of providing much needed immediate tax relief to the American people, and lay a foundation for further long-term economic growth.

No one should be forced to pay more than a third of what they earn in taxes. In fact, 77 percent of the tax relief associated with cutting the top rate in H.R. 1836 would go to small business owners and entrepreneurs – the engines of growth in our economy.

The Administration looks forward to working with Congress through the legislative process to achieve a result that best embodies the objectives and priorities of the President's plan.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Accordingly, H.R. 1836 or any substitute amendment in lieu thereof, that would also reduce revenues, will be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement. The Administration will work with Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur under current law or the enactment of any other proposals that meet the President's objectives to reduce the debt, fund priority initiatives, and grant tax relief to all income tax paying Americans.

This Statement of Administration Policy was developed by the Legislative Reference Division (Kho), in consultation with the Department of the Treasury (Chris Smith), WH Counsel (Kavanaugh), OVP (Conda), and CEA (Furchtgott-Roth).

The following did not respond to our request for views: WH/LA, NEC, EP, BRD, EIML, and HTF.

OMB/LA Clearance:

Administration Position to Date

H.R. 1836 is identical to H.R. 3, the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Act of 2001, which was passed by the House on March 8, 2001. A Statement of Administration Policy on H.R. 3 was sent to the House on March 8, 2001, stating that the Administration supports the bill as a "very positive first step" to achieving the objectives of the President's tax relief plan.

Summary of H.R. 1836

H.R. 1836 would create a new initial income tax rate bracket and consolidate the five current income tax rates into four by 2006.

New Low Income Tax Rate Bracket. H.R. 1836 would create a new income tax bracket for a portion of taxable income that is currently taxed at 15 percent. The new initial bracket would cover taxable income up to $6,000 for single individuals, up to $10,000 for heads of households, and up to $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns. The lower rate for the new bracket would be phased in as follows:

-- for taxable years beginning in calendar years 2001 and 2002, 12 percent;
-- for taxable years beginning in calendar years 2003, 2004, and 2005, 11 percent; and
-- for taxable years beginning in calendar year 2006, 10 percent.

The taxable income levels for the new low-rate bracket would be adjusted annually for inflation for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2006.

The current 15-percent income tax bracket would be adjusted to start at the end of the new low-rate income tax bracket. The 15-percent income tax bracket would end at the same level as under current law. (Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$4.9 billion; FY 2002: -$36.3 billion; FYs 2001-2005: -$172.9 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$374.9 billion.)

Reduction of Other Tax Rates and Consolidation of Rate Brackets. Beginning in calendar year 2002, H.R. 1836 would begin to phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates. H.R. 1836 would consolidate the number of rate brackets from five (15 percent, 28 percent, 31 percent, 36 percent, and 39.6 percent) to four by calendar year 2006.

H.R. 1836 would phase down the current income tax rates of 28 percent and 31 percent to 25 percent over five years. The taxable income level for the new 25-percent rate bracket would begin at the level at which the 28-percent rate bracket begins under the current law and end at the level at which the 31-percent rate bracket ends under the current law.

H.R. 1836 would phase down the current income tax rates of 36 percent and 39.6 percent to 33 percent over five years. The taxable income level for the new 33-percent rate bracket would begin at the level at which the 36-percent rate bracket begins under the current law.

The table below shows the schedule for the income tax rate reductions.

For taxable years beginning during calendar year:	The corresponding percentages would be substituted for the following percentages:
	28%	31%	36%	39.6%
2002	27%	30%	35%	38%
2003	27%	29%	35%	37%
2004	26%	28%	34%	36%
2005	26%	27%	34%	35%
2006 and later	25%	25%	33%	33%

(Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY2002: -$11.7 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$165.1 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$499.8 billion.)

Other Provisions of H.R. 1836. The bill would repeal the current-law provisions that offset the refundable child credit (for families with three or more children) and the earned income credit by the amount of the alternative minimum tax (AMT) for taxpayers subject to the AMT. (Treasury estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$45 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$1.7 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$7.3 billion.)

The bill would also specify that transfers of income taxes to any of the trust funds under the Social Security Act would continue as under current law. This provision of the bill would ensure that the long-term financial condition of the Social Security and Medicare trust funds would not be affected by enactment of the bill.

H.R. 1836 would require the Treasury to implement regulations revising wage withholding tables to reflect the rate reduction for calendar year 2001 such that the tables could be applied to amounts paid after the 60th day following enactment of this bill.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

As noted above, H.R. 1836 is identical to H.R. 3. Brett, Janet Walker suggested that I contact you. Larry Lindsey has had several requests for signed photographs. In one case, the person intends to put the photo in a museum. Are there any restrictions on sending autographed photos for a "commercial" enterprise such as a museum?

Thanks for your help.

DRAFT 5/16/01 2:55PM

Dear Mr. Chairman:

I am writing in order to express the views of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) regarding H.R. 577, the bill on the disclosure of contributions to Presidential library foundations, as amended by the House Government Reform Committee's Subcommittee on Government Efficiency on May 8, 2001. While NARA did not take a position on this legislation as introduced, for the reasons cited below, NARA opposes the substitute amendment adopted by the Subcommittee. NARA has two critical problems with the way the legislation is currently crafted and would oppose the bill as now constructed.

First, it is NARA's understanding that the bill's original intent was to address the threat posed by contributions to a Presidential library foundation as a means to curry favor with a sitting president. The bill's sponsor stated that he introduced the bill "because I felt the public should be aware of possible conflicts of interest that sitting presidents can have while raising funds for their libraries." However, the substitute amendment would require organizations that raise funds for presidential libraries of current and former Presidents to disclose the amounts and sources of those contributions to Congress and the administration every year. It also would require the National Archives and Records Administration to make that information available to the public on the Internet. Given the amount of resources, paperwork, time, and energy that the implementation of this provision would require from the National Archives and ten presidential library foundations, we strongly urge that the legislation limit the disclosure of information to contributions to the library foundation for the future library of a sitting President.

Second, the substitute amendment would require NARA to promulgate regulations to implement the bill and, as previously noted, to disclose contributions given to presidential library foundations to the public. NARA views itself as a close partner with the presidential library foundations and has virtually the same goals as these entities. Given our close working relationship with these groups, NARA is concerned that this new regulatory and oversight role might be construed as creating a conflict of interest for the agency. Therefore, we strongly urge the Committee to consider another agency (perhaps the Federal Elections Commission) to carry out these responsibilities. While it would seem odd to have such a Commission involved if the scope of the bill continued to include the library foundation for the library of a former President, it would not be so if the contributions in question were limited to the future library of a current President and handled much the same as the disclosure of campaign contributions.

NARA supports the logic of the $5,000 dollar threshold established by the substitute amendment based on the potential burden posed by any lower amount and the fact that this would create a uniformity with IRS reporting requirements for foundations. However, we repeat our concern over including existing libraries in this disclosure requirement. Under this requirement, these institutions face the possibility of losing contributions, because many donors desire personal privacy and wish to protect their right to give money anonymously -- a right offered by every competing private museum in the country.

In summary, NARA opposes H.R. 577 in its current form and stands ready to provide the Committee any additional information or assistance required. If we may be of further assistance, please contact John Constance at (301)713-7340.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. CARLIN

S. 896 – Restoring Earnings to Lift Individuals and Empower Families (RELIEF) Act of 2001

(Sen. Grassley (R) Iowa)

x7200

The Administration supports Senate passage of S. 896 as another positive step on the way to bringing much needed tax relief to the American people. The Administration commends the authors of the RELIEF Act for their leadership.

The bill begins to lay a foundation for further long-term economic growth, through the inclusion of four key elements of the President's Tax Cut Plan: reducing current income tax rates, including a new low 10 percent rate; eliminating the death tax; increasing the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 per child and applying the credit to the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT); and reducing the marriage penalty. The bill also begins the process of providing much needed immediate tax relief.

However, the Administration believes more tax relief is needed for small business owners and entrepreneurs - the engines of growth in the Nation's economy - who pay the top rates. Moreover, to increase incentives for investment and encourage economic growth, the Administration believes the reductions in the marginal tax rates should be phased in more quickly.

The Administration remains committed to the core principles of providing income tax relief to Americans, reducing the tax penalty on work, saving, and investment, and putting money back into the pockets of American consumers as quickly as possible. The Administration will work together with the Congress as the legislative process continues to achieve a final result that best embodies the priorities and objectives of the President's plan.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Accordingly, S. 896 or any substitute amendment in lieu thereof, that would also reduce revenues, will be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement. The Administration will work with the Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur under current law or the enactment of any other proposals that meet the President's objectives to reduce the debt, fund priority initiatives, and grant tax relief to all income tax paying Americans.

SUMMARY OF S. 896

S. 896 would reduce current income tax rates, reduce the marriage penalty, increase the child tax credit, eliminate the estate tax, and provide a number of changes to other current tax laws, including education and pension provisions.

TAX RATES

S. 896 would create a new initial tax rate bracket beginning in calendar year 2001 and phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates over six years.

New Low Income Tax Rate Bracket. The bill would create a new 10 percent income tax bracket for a portion of taxable income that is currently taxed at 15 percent. The new initial bracket would cover taxable income up to $6,000 for single individuals, up to $10,000 for heads of households, and up to $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns. The lower rate would be effective for taxable years beginning in calendar year 2001.

The taxable income levels for the new low-rate bracket would be adjusted annually for inflation for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2006.

The current 15-percent income tax bracket would be adjusted to start at the end of the new low-rate income tax bracket. The 15-percent income tax bracket would end at the same level as under current law. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$9.4 billion; FY 2002: -$ 59.2 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$229.5 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$438.7 billion.)
par
Reduction of Other Tax Rates. Beginning in calendar year 2002, S. 896 would begin to phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates. The bill would phase down the current four income tax rates of 39.6 percent, 36 percent, 31 percent, and 28 percent to 36 percent, 33 percent, 28 percent, and 25 percent, respectively, over six years. The table below shows the schedule for the income tax rate reductions.

For taxable years beginning during calendar years: 722 brdrs	The corresponding percentages would be substituted for the following percentages:
	3 6 %
2002 - 2004	27%	30%	35%	38.6%
2005 - 2006	26%	29%	34%	37.6%
rdrs2007 and thereafter	25%	28%	33%	36%

480

The bill would require the Treasury to make appropriate revisions to the wage withholding tables to reflect the proposed rate reduction for calendar year 2001 as expeditiously as possible. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$11.7 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$112.6 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$397.3 billion.)

MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF

S. 896 would increase, for married couples filing joint tax returns: (1) the basic standard deductions; (2) the size of the 15 percent income tax bracket; and (3) the earned income amount used to calculate the earned income credit.

Increase in Standard Deduction for Married Couples. Under current law, for taxable years beginning in 2001, the basic standard deduction amount for married couples filing joint returns is 168 percent of the basic standard deduction amount for single filers. Under the bill, the basic standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return would be 200 percent of the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. Under current law, the basic standard deduction amount for a married taxpayer filing a separate return is 84 percent of the basic standard deduction amount for single filers. Under the bill, the basic standard deduction for a married taxpayer filing separately would be equal to the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. These increases would be phased-in over five years beginning in 2006 and would be fully phased-in for 2010 and thereafter. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FYs 2002-2006: -$0.8 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$12.8 billion.) r

Expansion of the 15-percent Rate Bracket for Married Couples Filing Joint Returns. Under current law, for taxable years beginning in 2001, the size of the 15 percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return is 167 percent the size of the 15 percent bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. S. 896 would increase the size of the 15 percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size of the 15 percent bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. This increase would be phased in as shown in the table below.

For taxable years beginning in calendar years:	The size of the 15 percent rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return as a percentage of the rate bracket for unmarried individuals would be:
2006	174%
2007	180%
2008	187%
2009	193%
rdrs2010 and thereafter	200%

(Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FYs 2002-2006: -$2.3 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$24.6 billion.)

Earned Income Credit (EIC) Modification and Simplification . For married couples filing joint returns, S. 896 would increase the beginning and ending income levels of the earned income credit phase-out by $3,000. The bill would simplify the definition of earned income by excluding non-taxable earned income amounts from the definition of earned income for EIC purposes. The bill would also simplify the calculation of the EIC by replacing modified gross income with adjusted gross income. The bill would repeal the provision in current law that reduces the EIC by the amount of an individual's alternative minimum tax These provisions of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: loss of less than $50 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$12.9 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$59.8 billion.)

CHILD TAX CREDIT

S. 896 would increase the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 for each qualifying child.

Increase and Expansion of the Child Tax Credit. The bill would increase the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 for each qualifying child under the age of 17. The increase would be phased in over eleven years as shown in the table below:

For taxable years beginning in calendar years:	The credit amount per child would be:
2001- 2003	$600
2004-2006	$700
2007-2009	$800
2010	$900
rdrs2011 and thereafter	$1,000

480

The bill would make this child credit refundable for up to 15 percent of the taxpayer's earned income in excess of $10,000. Consequently, in 2001, families having earned income of at least $14,000 and one child would get a refundable credit of $600. Families with three or more children would be permitted to use the present-law refundable child credit or the proposed refundable child credit.

S. 896 would also allow the child credit to be claimed against the alternative minimum tax (AMT) permanently and would repeal the AMT offset of refundable credits. This provision of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$0.6 billion; FY 2002: -$10.4 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$70.3 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$190.4 billion.)

ESTATE TAX

S. 896 would provide for phased reductions of current estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes over ten years and repeal these taxes for estates of decedents dying and for generation-skipping transfers made after December 31, 2010.

Estate and Gift Taxes. Under current law, an estate tax is imposed on transfers of assets of a taxpayer at death, and a gift tax is imposed on transfers of assets during a taxpayer's lifetime. The estate and gift taxes are unified such that a single graduated rate schedule applies to cumulative taxable transfers made by a taxpayer during his or her lifetime and at death. The current rate schedule ranges from 18 percent on the first $10,000 in cumulative taxable transfers to 55 percent on transfers over $3 million. Current law provides, through a tax credit called the "unified credit," for the elimination of taxes on taxable gifts and taxable estates on a total of $675,000 for gifts made, and for estates of decedents dying, after 1999. This total, called the "applicable exclusion amount," increases to $700,000 in 2002 and 2003, $850,000 in 2004, $950,000 in 2005, and $1,000,000 in 2006 and subsequent years.

The bill would provide for phased reductions, over ten years, of current estate and gift taxes and repeal the estate tax for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2010. S. 896 would reduce the top tax rate on estates and gifts from 55 percent to 50 percent in 2002. From 2003 through 2007, the top tax rate would be further reduced by one percentage point per year, until it reaches 45 percent. In 2011, when the estate tax would be repealed, the top gift tax would be reduced to 40 percent and would remain at that level thereafter.

S. 896 would increase "the applicable exclusion amount" as shown in the table below.

Generation-Skipping Transfer Taxes. A generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax generally is imposed on transfers, either directly or through a trust, to a "skip person" (i.e., a beneficiary in a generation more than one generation below that of the transferor). An exemption of $1 million (indexed for inflation beginning in 1999) is provided for each person making GSTs. For transfers made through 1998, the GST exemption was $1 million. For transfers made in 1999, the exemption was $1,010,000. If the value of transferred property exceeds the amount of GST exemption allocated to that property, then the GST tax generally is imposed at a flat rate equal to the highest estate tax rate (currently 55 percent) on the value of the taxable property at the time of a taxable event. s22

S. 896 would make several relatively technical amendments to the GST tax before repealing the GST tax in 2011. These amendments generally would: (1) provide for a lower asset valuation than under current law, when allocating an asset to the GST exemption, through certain automatic and retroactive allocations; and (2) allow for assets to be allocated to the GST exemption, that otherwise would not be allocated, through provisions for taxpayer relief for errors in GST allocation. This provision of the bill would apply to transfers subject to estate or gift tax made after December 31, 2000, and to estate tax inclusion periods ending after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$2 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$39 million; FYs 2002-2011: -$89 million.)

Basis of Property at Death. The "basis" value of property is the value for tax purposes of an individual's investment in a property. The basis is used for tax purposes to compute gains or losses on the sale or exchange of property. Under current law, the basis of property received from a decedent is its fair market value on the date of the decedent's death. This "step up" (or "step down") in basis eliminates the recognition of any income on the appreciation of property that occurred prior to the decedent's death. Under the bill, after repeal of the estate and GST taxes, the basis of assets received from a decedent generally would be the basis as it would have been in the hands of the decedent or the last preceding owner by whom it was not acquired by gift. For specified amounts, however, the beneficiary would receive a "step up" in basis, i.e., the basis would be the fair market value for up to $1.3 million of assets left to any beneficiary and an additional $3 million of assets left to a surviving spouse, thus allowing such individuals to inherit these amounts without paying accumulated capital gains taxes. The bill would provide for annual cost-of-living adjustments to these totals after December 31, 2010.

Conservation Easements. Under current law, an executor may elect to exclude from the taxable estate 40 percent of the value of any land subject to a "qualified conservation easement," i.e., a contribution of a qualified real property interest to a qualified organization exclusively for conservation purposes. S. 896 would expand the availability of qualified conservation easements to any property within the United States that otherwise meets the requirements of a conservation easement by repealing the distance requirements for qualified conservation easement. The bill would also clarify that the date for determining easement compliance would be the date on which the donation was made. This provision of the bill would be effective for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$3 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$109 million; FYs 2002-2011: -$292 million.)

ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX

S. 896 would increase the alternative minimum tax exemption amount for married and unmarried individuals.

Individual Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) Relief. Under current law, an alternative minimum tax is imposed on individuals to the extent that the tentative minimum tax exceeds the regular tax. The tentative minimum tax generally is an amount equal to the sum of (1) 26 percent of the first $175,000 (or the first $87,500 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return) of alternative minimum taxable income in excess of an exemption amount and (2) 28 percent of the remaining alternative minimum taxable income. Alternative minimum taxable income is the individual©2s taxable income adjusted to take account of specified preferences and adjustments. The AMT exemption amounts are: (1) $45,000 in the case of married individuals filing a joint return and surviving spouses; (2) $33,750 in the case of other unmarried individuals; and (3) $22,500 in the case of married individuals filing a separate return, estates, and trusts.

The bill would increase the alternative minimum tax exemption amount for married couples filing a joint return and surviving spouses by $4,000 in 2001 through 2006. The alternative minimum tax exemption amounts for other individuals (i.e., unmarried individuals and married individuals filing a separate return) would increase by $2,000 in 2001 through 2006. This provision of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000, and before January 1, 2007. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$0.2 billion; FY 2002: -$2.2 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$27 billion; FYs 2001-2011: ar-$33.1 billion.)

EDUCATION-RELATED TAX PROVISIONS

S. 896 would make changes to current laws allowing contributions to funds for certain future education expenses of named beneficiaries and other tax laws related to education.

Deduction for Qualified Higher Education Expenses. The bill would allow deductions of up to $3,000 annually for higher-education expenses paid by individuals with taxable income up to $65,000 or couples with incomes up to $130,000 in 2002 and 2003, and in 2004 and 2005, allow deductions of up to $5,000 for these same taxpayers and up to $2,000 for individuals with taxable income no greater than $80,000 or $160,000 for joint filers.

Exclusion for Employer-Provided Education Assistance. S. 896 would provide for a permanent extension of the tax-free treatment of employer-provided education assistance for undergraduate and graduate level courses beginning after December 31, 2001.1

Education IRAs. Education IRAs (Ed IRAs), which were created by the "Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997," are trusts or custodial accounts created exclusively to pay higher education expenses (i.e., tuition, fees, books) of a named beneficiary. Contributions to Ed IRAs are not tax deductible but earnings on the account generally are not taxed until they are distributed to the beneficiary. Contributions into those accounts can be made by any person or corporation, but the contribution amount is phased out for higher income taxpayers, and is capped at $500 annually per beneficiary until the beneficiary reaches age 18. S. 896 would modify Ed IRAs by: increasing the limit on annual contributions to Ed IRAs for a beneficiary from $500 to $2,000; allowing Ed IRA contributions for a "special needs beneficiary" (as defined by Treasury Department regulations) above the age of 18; clarifying that corporations, tax-exempt organizations, and other entities may contribute to Ed IRAs, regardless of income; allowing contributions until April 15th of the following year, with the contribution counting towards the preceding taxable year; allowing taxpayers to exclude Ed IRA distributions from gross income and claim the HOPE or Lifetime Learning credit as long as they are not used for the same expenses; repealing the excise tax on contributions made to Ed IRAs when the contributions are made by anyone on behalf of the same beneficiary to a qualified State tuition program; modifying the phase-out range for married taxpayers to $190,000-$220,000 so it is twice the range for single taxpayers; and permitting tax-free withdrawals from Ed IRAs to be used for qualified expenses at a public, private, or religious elementary school (with "school" defined by State law).

par
Modifications to Student Loan Interest Deductionin . The bill would eliminate the 60-month limit on the deductibility of interest paid on qualified student loans and i plain ncrease the phase-out range for those deductions to from $40,000-$55,000 for singles to $50,000-$60,000 and from $60,000-$75,000 for joint filers to $100,000-$130,000 for interest paid on loans after December 31, 2001.

Qualified Prepaid Tuition/Savings Programs plain . Qualified State tuition programs allow individuals to purchase tuition credits for a named beneficiary or make contributions to a savings account plan for a beneficiary to cover higher education expenses. S. 896 would modify prepaid qualified tuition and savings programs to: allow tax-free distributions from f1 State plans, allow tax-free distributions for actual living expenses, and allow private institutions to offer prepaid tuition plans, tax-deferred in tax years beginning after December 31, 2001, with tax-free distributions in tax years beginning after December 31, 2003; allow a taxpayer to exclude qualified State tuition program distributions from gross income and claim the HOPE or Lifetime Learning credits as long as they are not used for the same expenses; and expand the definition of family member to include cousins for purposes of tax-free rollovers and other benefits under the programs.

Other Education-Related Provisions. The bill would eliminate the tax on awards under the National Health Corps Scholarship program and F. Edward Hebert Armed Forces Health Professions Scholarship program. The bill would also improve local options for the construction and renovation of public schools by increasing, from $10 million to $15 million, the amount of bonds "small governmental units" may issue to finance qualified school construction before being subject to the arbitrage rebate requirement and by allowing the issuance of tax-exempt private activity bonds for privately owned public education facilities subject to annual State caps equal to the greater of $10 per resident or $5 million.

These provisions would be effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 2001, unless otherwise noted above. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$2.5 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$18.7 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$32.8 billion.)

RETIREMENT SAVINGS AND PENSION COVERAGE

The bill would make numerous changes to pension and retirement savings laws. For example, S. 896 would modify individual retirement account (IRA) contribution limits by: (1) increasing the maximum annual dollar amount contribution limit for IRA contributions from $2,000 to $2,500 in 2002 through 2005, $3,000 in 2006 and 2007, $3,500 in 2008 and 2009, $4,000 in 2010, $5,000 in 2011, and indexed for inflation thereafter; (2) expanding the increase of the IRA maximum contribution limit for individuals who have attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year by providing for a $500 "catch-up" in 2002 through 2005, $1,000 in 2006 through 2009, $1,500 in 2010 and $2,000 in 2011 and thereafter; and (3) allowing tax-free withdrawals from IRA's for charitable purposes.

In addition, the bill would change the employer pension system by: (1) increasing contribution limits to qualified cash or deferred arrangements (section 401(k) plans), tax-sheltered annuities (section 403(b) annuities), and certain deferred compensation plans (section 457 eligible plans) up to $15,000 in 2010 and allowing employees over age 50 to make additional annual contributions to those plans and annuities; (2) increasing other contribution, benefit and deduction limits under the qualified plan rules; (3) eliminating certain rules regarding nondiscrimination and rules applying to top-heavy plans (defined benefit plans where 60 percent of the cumulative accrued benefits are for key employees); and (4) providing small businesses a non-refundable tax credit for a portion of the cost of the contributions and administrative expenses of establishing a new plan.

S. 896 also provides a temporary non-refundable tax credit for low and middle income individuals who save in IRAs or qualified plans, requires faster vesting for employer matching contributions, and affords greater portability among IRAs and the different types of employer plans.

(JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$1.5 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$16.0 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$40.1 billion.)

SUNSET PROVISIONS

The provisions of S. 896 would sunset as follows. The individual income tax rate reductions, the provisions relating to the child tax credit, the marriage penalty relief provisions, and the education provisions would have no effect for taxable years beginning after September 30, 2011. The estate, gift, and generation-skipping tax provisions would have no effect for decedents dying and gifts made after September 30, 2011. The pension and individual retirement arrangement provisions would have no effect for years beginning after September 30, 2011.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO SCORING

S. 896 could affect receipts; therefore, it would be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that S. 896 would have a net budget cost of $10.1 billion in FY 2001, $87.5 billion in FY 2002, $523.1 billion over six years, FY 2001-2006, and $1.4 trillion over 11 years, FY 2001-2011. Estimates by the Department of the Treasury are not available.

REV_00126652

(Senate)

S. 896 – Restoring Earnings to Lift Individuals and Empower Families (RELIEF) Act of 2001
(Sen. Grassley (R) Iowa)

The Administration supports Senate passage of S. 896 as another positive step on the way to bringing much needed tax relief to the American people. The Administration commends the authors of the RELIEF Act for their leadership.

The bill begins to lay a foundation for further long-term economic growth, through the inclusion of four key elements of the President's Tax Cut Plan: reducing current income tax rates, including a new low 10 percent rate; eliminating the death tax; increasing the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 per child and applying the credit to the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT); and reducing the marriage penalty. The bill also begins the process of providing much needed immediate tax relief.

However, the Administration believes more tax relief is needed for small business owners and entrepreneurs - the engines of growth in the Nation's economy - who pay the top rates. Moreover, to increase incentives for investment and encourage economic growth, the Administration believes the reductions in the marginal tax rates should be phased in more quickly.

The Administration remains committed to the core principles of providing income tax relief to Americans, reducing the tax penalty on work, saving, and investment, and putting money back into the pockets of American consumers as quickly as possible. The Administration will work together with the Congress as the legislative process continues to achieve a final result that best embodies the priorities and objectives of the President's plan.

Pay-As-You-Go Scoring

Any law that would reduce receipts is subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Accordingly, S. 896 or any substitute amendment in lieu thereof, that would also reduce revenues, will be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirement. The Administration will work with the Congress to ensure that any unintended sequester of spending does not occur under current law or the enactment of any other proposals that meet the President's objectives to reduce the debt, fund priority initiatives, and grant tax relief to all income tax paying Americans.

SUMMARY OF S. 896

S. 896 would reduce current income tax rates, reduce the marriage penalty, increase the child tax credit, eliminate the estate tax, and provide a number of changes to other current tax laws, including education and pension provisions.

TAX RATES

S. 896 would create a new initial tax rate bracket beginning in calendar year 2001 and phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates over six years.

New Low Income Tax Rate Bracket. The bill would create a new 10 percent income tax bracket for a portion of taxable income that is currently taxed at 15 percent. The new initial bracket would cover taxable income up to $6,000 for single individuals, up to $10,000 for heads of households, and up to $12,000 for married couples filing joint returns. The lower rate would be effective for taxable years beginning in calendar year 2001.

The taxable income levels for the new low-rate bracket would be adjusted annually for inflation for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2006.

The current 15-percent income tax bracket would be adjusted to start at the end of the new low-rate income tax bracket. The 15-percent income tax bracket would end at the same level as under current law. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$9.4 billion; FY 2002: -$ 59.2 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$229.5 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$438.7 billion.)

Reduction of Other Tax Rates. Beginning in calendar year 2002, S. 896 would begin to phase in reductions to the four highest income tax rates. The bill would phase down the current four income tax rates of 39.6 percent, 36 percent, 31 percent, and 28 percent to 36 percent, 33 percent, 28 percent, and 25 percent, respectively, over six years. The table below shows the schedule for the income tax rate reductions.

For taxable years beginning during calendar years:	The corresponding percentages would be substituted for the following percentages:
	28%	31%	36%	39.6%
2002 - 2004	27%	30%	35%	38.6%
2005 - 2006	26%	29%	34%	37.6%
2007 and thereafter	25%	28%	33%	36%

The bill would require the Treasury to make appropriate revisions to the wage withholding tables to reflect the proposed rate reduction for calendar year 2001 as expeditiously as possible. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$11.7 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$112.6 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$397.3 billion.)

MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF

S. 896 would increase, for married couples filing joint tax returns: (1) the basic standard deductions; (2) the size of the 15 percent income tax bracket; and (3) the earned income amount used to calculate the earned income credit.

Increase in Standard Deduction for Married Couples. Under current law, for taxable years beginning in 2001, the basic standard deduction amount for married couples filing joint returns is 168 percent of the basic standard deduction amount for single filers. Under the bill, the basic standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return would be 200 percent of the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. Under current law, the basic standard deduction amount for a married taxpayer filing a separate return is 84 percent of the basic standard deduction amount for single filers. Under the bill, the basic standard deduction for a married taxpayer filing separately would be equal to the basic standard deduction for an unmarried individual filing a single return. These increases would be phased-in over five years beginning in 2006 and would be fully phased-in for 2010 and thereafter. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FYs 2002-2006: -$0.8 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$12.8 billion.)

Expansion of the 15-percent Rate Bracket for Married Couples Filing Joint Returns. Under current law, for taxable years beginning in 2001, the size of the 15 percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return is 167 percent the size of the 15 percent bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. S. 896 would increase the size of the 15 percent regular income tax rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size of the 15 percent bracket for an unmarried individual filing a single return. This increase would be phased in as shown in the table below.

For taxable years beginning in calendar years:	The size of the 15 percent rate bracket for a married couple filing a joint return as a percentage of the rate bracket for unmarried individuals would be:
2006	174%

2007	180%
2008	187%
2009	193%
2010 and thereafter	200%

(Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: $0; FYs 2002-2006: -$2.3 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$24.6 billion.)

Earned Income Credit (EIC) Modification and Simplification. For married couples filing joint returns, S. 896 would increase the beginning and ending income levels of the earned income credit phase-out by $3,000. The bill would simplify the definition of earned income by excluding non-taxable earned income amounts from the definition of earned income for EIC purposes. The bill would also simplify the calculation of the EIC by replacing modified gross income with adjusted gross income. The bill would repeal the provision in current law that reduces the EIC by the amount of an individual's alternative minimum tax These provisions of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: loss of less than $50 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$12.9 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$59.8 billion.)

S. 896 would increase the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 for each qualifying child.

Increase and Expansion of the Child Tax Credit. The bill would increase the child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 for each qualifying child under the age of 17. The increase would be phased in over eleven years as shown in the table below:

For taxable years beginning in calendar years:	The credit amount per child would be:
2001- 2003	$600
2004-2006	$700
2007-2009	$800
2010	$900
2011 and thereafter	$1,000

The bill would make this child credit refundable for up to 15 percent of the taxpayer's earned income in excess of $10,000. Consequently, in 2001, families having earned income of at least $14,000 and one child would get a refundable credit of $600. Families with three or more children would be permitted to use the present-law refundable child credit or the proposed refundable child credit.

S. 896 would also allow the child credit to be claimed against the alternative minimum tax (AMT) permanently and would repeal the AMT offset of refundable credits. This provision of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$0.6 billion; FY 2002: -$10.4 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$70.3 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$190.4 billion.)

ESTATE TAX

S. 896 would provide for phased reductions of current estate, gift, and generation-skipping transfer taxes over ten years and repeal these taxes for estates of decedents dying and for generation-skipping transfers made after December 31, 2010.

Estate and Gift Taxes. Under current law, an estate tax is imposed on transfers of assets of a taxpayer at death, and a gift tax is imposed on transfers of assets during a taxpayer's lifetime. The estate and gift taxes are unified such that a single graduated rate schedule applies to cumulative taxable transfers made by a taxpayer during his or her lifetime and at death. The current rate schedule ranges from 18 percent on the first $10,000 in cumulative taxable transfers to 55 percent on transfers over $3 million. Current law provides, through a tax credit called the "unified credit," for the elimination of taxes on taxable gifts and taxable estates on a total of $675,000 for gifts made, and for estates of decedents dying, after 1999. This total, called the "applicable exclusion amount," increases to $700,000 in 2002 and 2003, $850,000 in 2004, $950,000 in 2005, and $1,000,000 in 2006 and subsequent years.

The bill would provide for phased reductions, over ten years, of current estate and gift taxes and repeal the estate tax for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2010. S. 896 would reduce the top tax rate on estates and gifts from 55 percent to 50 percent in 2002. From 2003 through 2007, the top tax rate would be further reduced by one percentage point per year, until it reaches 45 percent. In 2011, when the estate tax would be repealed, the top gift tax would be reduced to 40 percent and would remain at that level thereafter.

S. 896 would increase "the applicable exclusion amount" as shown in the table below.

Calendar Years	"Applicable Exclusion Amount"
2002 - 2003	$1 million
2004	$2 million
2005 - 2007	$3 million
2008 - 2009	$3.5 million
2010	$4 million
2011	N/A (taxes repealed)

(Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect (for this section on "Estate and Gift Taxes" and the section below on "Basis of Property after death") for FY 2002: $0; FYs 2002-2006: -$40 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$144.2 billion.)

Generation-Skipping Transfer Taxes. A generation-skipping transfer (GST) tax generally is imposed on transfers, either directly or through a trust, to a "skip person" (i.e., a beneficiary in a generation more than one generation below that of the transferor). An exemption of $1 million (indexed for inflation beginning in 1999) is provided for each person making GSTs. For transfers made through 1998, the GST exemption was $1 million. For transfers made in 1999, the exemption was $1,010,000. If the value of transferred property exceeds the amount of GST exemption allocated to that property, then the GST tax generally is imposed at a flat rate equal to the highest estate tax rate (currently 55 percent) on the value of the taxable property at the time of a taxable event.

S. 896 would make several relatively technical amendments to the GST tax before repealing the GST tax in 2011. These amendments generally would: (1) provide for a lower asset valuation than under current law, when allocating an asset to the GST exemption, through certain automatic and retroactive allocations; and (2) allow for assets to be allocated to the GST exemption, that otherwise would not be allocated, through provisions for taxpayer relief for errors in GST allocation. This provision of the bill would apply to transfers subject to estate or gift tax made after December 31, 2000, and to estate tax inclusion periods ending after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$2 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$39 million; FYs 2002-2011: -$89 million.)

Basis of Property at Death. The "basis" value of property is the value for tax purposes of an individual's investment in a property. The basis is used for tax purposes to compute gains or losses on the sale or exchange of property. Under current law, the basis of property received from a decedent is its fair market value on the date of the decedent's death. This "step up" (or "step down") in basis eliminates the recognition of any income on the appreciation of property that occurred prior to the decedent's death. Under the bill, after repeal of the estate and GST taxes, the basis of assets received from a decedent generally would be the basis as it would have been in the hands of the decedent or the last preceding owner by whom it was not acquired by gift. For specified amounts, however, the beneficiary would receive a "step up" in basis, i.e., the basis would be the fair market value for up to $1.3 million of assets left to any beneficiary and an additional $3 million of assets left to a surviving spouse, thus allowing such individuals to inherit these amounts without paying accumulated capital gains taxes. The bill would provide for annual cost-of-living adjustments to these totals after December 31, 2010.

Conservation Easements. Under current law, an executor may elect to exclude from the taxable estate 40 percent of the value of any land subject to a "qualified conservation easement," i.e., a contribution of a qualified real property interest to a qualified organization exclusively for conservation purposes. S. 896 would expand the availability of qualified conservation easements to any property within the United States that otherwise meets the requirements of a conservation easement by repealing the distance requirements for qualified conservation easement. The bill would also clarify that the date for determining easement compliance would be the date on which the donation was made. This provision of the bill would be effective for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 2000. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$3 million; FYs 2002-2006: -$109 million; FYs 2002-2011: -$292 million.)

S. 896 would increase the alternative minimum tax exemption amount for married and unmarried individuals.

Individual Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) Relief. Under current law, an alternative minimum tax is imposed on individuals to the extent that the tentative minimum tax exceeds the regular tax. The tentative minimum tax generally is an amount equal to the sum of (1) 26 percent of the first $175,000 (or the first $87,500 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return) of alternative minimum taxable income in excess of an exemption amount and (2) 28 percent of the remaining alternative minimum taxable income. Alternative minimum taxable income is the individual's taxable income adjusted to take account of specified preferences and adjustments. The AMT exemption amounts are: (1) $45,000 in the case of married individuals filing a joint return and surviving spouses; (2) $33,750 in the case of other unmarried individuals; and (3) $22,500 in the case of married individuals filing a separate return, estates, and trusts.

The bill would increase the alternative minimum tax exemption amount for married couples filing a joint return and surviving spouses by $4,000 in 2001 through 2006. The alternative minimum tax exemption amounts for other individuals (i.e., unmarried individuals and married individuals filing a separate return) would increase by $2,000 in 2001 through 2006. This provision of the bill would be effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000, and before January 1, 2007. (Joint Committee on Taxation estimated revenue effect for FY 2001: -$0.2 billion; FY 2002: -$2.2 billion; FYs 2001-2006: -$27 billion; FYs 2001-2011: -$33.1 billion.)

EDUCATION-RELATED TAX PROVISIONS

S. 896 would make changes to current laws allowing contributions to funds for certain future education expenses of named beneficiaries and other tax laws related to education.

Deduction for Qualified Higher Education Expenses. The bill would allow deductions of up to $3,000 annually for higher-education expenses paid by individuals with taxable income up to $65,000 or couples with incomes up to $130,000 in 2002 and 2003, and in 2004 and 2005, allow deductions of up to $5,000 for these same taxpayers and up to $2,000 for individuals with taxable income no greater than $80,000 or $160,000 for joint filers.

Exclusion for Employer-Provided Education Assistance. S. 896 would provide for a permanent extension of the tax-free treatment of employer-provided education assistance for undergraduate and graduate level courses beginning after December 31, 2001.

Education IRAs. Education IRAs (Ed IRAs), which were created by the "Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997," are trusts or custodial accounts created exclusively to pay higher education expenses (i.e., tuition, fees, books) of a named beneficiary. Contributions to

Ed IRAs are not tax deductible but earnings on the account generally are not taxed until they are distributed to the beneficiary. Contributions into those accounts can be made by any person or corporation, but the contribution amount is phased out for higher income taxpayers, and is capped at $500 annually per beneficiary until the beneficiary reaches age 18. S. 896 would modify Ed IRAs by: increasing the limit on annual contributions to Ed IRAs for a beneficiary from $500 to $2,000; allowing Ed IRA contributions for a "special needs beneficiary" (as defined by Treasury Department regulations) above the age of 18; clarifying that corporations, tax-exempt organizations, and other entities may contribute to Ed IRAs, regardless of income; allowing contributions until April 15th of the following year, with the contribution counting towards the preceding taxable year; allowing taxpayers to exclude Ed IRA distributions from gross income and claim the HOPE or Lifetime Learning credit as long as they are not used for the same expenses; repealing the excise tax on contributions made to Ed IRAs when the contributions are made by anyone on behalf of the same beneficiary to a qualified State tuition program; modifying the phase-out range for married taxpayers to $190,000-$220,000 so it is twice the range for single taxpayers; and permitting tax-free withdrawals from Ed IRAs to be used for qualified expenses at a public, private, or religious elementary school (with "school" defined by State law).

Modifications to Student Loan Interest Deduction. The bill would eliminate the 60-month limit on the deductibility of interest paid on qualified student loans and increase the phase-out range for those deductions to from $40,000-$55,000 for singles to $50,000-$60,000 and from $60,000-$75,000 for joint filers to $100,000-$130,000 for interest paid on loans after December 31, 2001.

Qualified Prepaid Tuition/Savings Programs. Qualified State tuition programs allow individuals to purchase tuition credits for a named beneficiary or make contributions to a savings account plan for a beneficiary to cover higher education expenses. S. 896 would modify prepaid qualified tuition and savings programs to: allow tax-free distributions from State plans, allow tax-free distributions for actual living expenses, and allow private institutions to offer prepaid tuition plans, tax-deferred in tax years beginning after December 31, 2001, with tax-free distributions in tax years beginning after December 31, 2003; allow a taxpayer to exclude qualified State tuition program distributions from gross income and claim the HOPE or Lifetime Learning credits as long as they are not used for the same expenses; and expand the definition of family member to include cousins for purposes of tax-free rollovers and other benefits under the programs.

Other Education-Related Provisions. The bill would eliminate the tax on awards under the National Health Corps Scholarship program and F. Edward Hebert Armed Forces

Health Professions Scholarship program. The bill would also improve local options for the construction and renovation of public schools by increasing, from $10 million to $15 million, the amount of bonds "small governmental units" may issue to finance qualified school construction before being subject to the arbitrage rebate requirement and by allowing the issuance of tax-exempt private activity bonds for privately owned public education facilities subject to annual State caps equal to the greater of $10 per resident or $5 million.

These provisions would be effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 2001, unless otherwise noted above. (JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$2.5 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$18.7 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$32.8 billion.)

RETIREMENT SAVINGS AND PENSION COVERAGE

The bill would make numerous changes to pension and retirement savings laws. For example, S. 896 would modify individual retirement account (IRA) contribution limits by: (1) increasing the maximum annual dollar amount contribution limit for IRA contributions from $2,000 to $2,500 in 2002 through 2005, $3,000 in 2006 and 2007, $3,500 in 2008 and 2009, $4,000 in 2010, $5,000 in 2011, and indexed for inflation thereafter; (2) expanding the increase of the IRA maximum contribution limit for individuals who have attained age 50 before the end of the taxable year by providing for a $500 "catch-up" in 2002 through 2005, $1,000 in 2006 through 2009, $1,500 in 2010 and $2,000 in 2011 and thereafter; and (3) allowing tax-free withdrawals from IRA's for charitable purposes.

In addition, the bill would change the employer pension system by: (1) increasing contribution limits to qualified cash or deferred arrangements (section 401(k) plans), tax-sheltered annuities (section 403(b) annuities), and certain deferred compensation plans (section 457 eligible plans) up to $15,000 in 2010 and allowing employees over age 50 to make additional annual contributions to those plans and annuities; (2) increasing other contribution, benefit and deduction limits under the qualified plan rules; (3) eliminating certain rules regarding nondiscrimination and rules applying to top-heavy plans (defined benefit plans where 60 percent of the cumulative accrued benefits are for key employees); and (4) providing small businesses a non-refundable tax credit for a portion of the cost of the contributions and administrative expenses of establishing a new plan.

S. 896 also provides a temporary non-refundable tax credit for low and middle income individuals who save in IRAs or qualified plans, requires faster vesting for employer matching contributions, and affords greater portability among IRAs and the different types of employer plans.

(JCT estimated revenue effect for FY 2002: -$1.5 billion; FYs 2002-2006: -$16.0 billion; FYs 2002-2011: -$40.1 billion.)

The provisions of S. 896 would sunset as follows. The individual income tax rate reductions, the provisions relating to the child tax credit, the marriage penalty relief provisions, and the education provisions would have no effect for taxable years beginning after September 30, 2011. The estate, gift, and generation-skipping tax provisions would have no effect for decedents dying and gifts made after September 30, 2011. The pension and individual retirement arrangement provisions would have no effect for years beginning after September 30, 2011.

PAY-AS-YOU-GO SCORING

S. 896 could affect receipts; therefore, it would be subject to the pay-as-you-go requirements of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1990. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that S. 896 would have a net budget cost of $10.1 billion in FY 2001, $87.5 billion in FY 2002, $523.1 billion over six years, FY 2001-2006, and $1.4 trillion over 11 years, FY 2001-2011. Estimates by the Department of the Treasury are not available.

The NBA purports to represent the interests of African-American Lawyers.
As a group, they have been very critical of Justice Thomas.

Subject: quick question

Does anyone know of any issues that Mr. Evett L. Simmons of the President, National Bar Assoc. might have with the Administration?

Sec. Card will be participating in a ceremony with him soon so we are checking to see if there are any ABA type issues with the NBA that Card should be aware of.

Thanks!

I think we should decide as a whole whether or not to provide anything beyond the press release -- it might look odd if we provide some but not others. I vote against providing resumes.

> When President Bush introduced his first 11 judicial nominees on May 9, he > enthusiastically stressed the group's diversity in gender and race. He > gleefully took credit for nominating the first Hispanic to the U.S. Court > of > Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, and for diplomatically renominating Roger > Gregory, the Clinton recess appointee on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the > 4th Circuit. But what Bush left unaddressed was the most critical > question, > one whose answer will reveal a great deal about how far to the right the > federal judiciary will likely tilt in the coming years and may determine > whether the Senate's Democrats are really willing to block nominees who > fail
> an ideological litmus test of moderation.
>
> The question is, how closely do the legal views of this set of federal > appeals court nominees match the philosophy of the jurists whom Bush has > depicted as his ideal: Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas, the > U.S.
> Supreme Court's most aggressively conservative members? Scalia and Thomas > are also the Justices least likely to read civil rights protections into > the > Constitution.
>
> Before the identities of Bush's nominees were disclosed, Senate Minority > Leader Thomas A. Daschle, D-S.D., declared that the Democrats "don't want > right-wingers. We don't, for that matter, ... want any extreme > left-wingers.
> I want people who come from the middle."
>
> But since learning the names of Bush's choices, Senate Democrats have > fallen > curiously silent about their intentions. If the Democrats hope to come up > with a master strategy for responding to the new President's judicial > nominees, they may have little time left.
>
> Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R- Utah, is expected > to > hold hearings next week on the three nominees to the 4th Circuit:
Gregory,
> Dennis W. Shedd, and Terrence W. Boyle. And Bush is expected to formally > announce three additional nominees who are already controversial: Peter > Keisler, Carolyn Kuhl, and Christopher Cox.
```

> With the exceptions of Gregory and Barrington Parker Jr., the President's > first 11 nominees appear to be conservatives who, to varying degrees, > would > rule as so-called "strict constructionists." If Bush succeeds in filling
> the > appellate courts with young appointees who share his legal views, his > conservative legacy will last for decades. Thomas L. Jipping of the > conservative Free Congress Foundation says that the slate of appointees > demonstrates that the President was hampered by "obvious political > considerations.... He came as close to the standard [articulated during > his > campaign] as the Senators would permit."
>
> While a jurist's legal philosophy certainly does not come into play in > most > cases, "it does make a difference in the handful of appeals where the > judges > have the opportunity to make some new law ," observes University of > Pittsburgh legal scholar Arthur D. Hellman. The federal Courts of Appeals, > the tribunals one tier below the Supreme Court, routinely wrestle with > politically charged issues, such as affirmative action, reproductive > rights, > redistricting, and patients' rights.
>
> What's discernable about the legal philosophies of Bush's first 11 picks > varies widely. The conservative views of University of Utah law professor > Michael McConnell, who has been nominated to the 10th Circuit, appear to > be > among the most extreme. The University of Chicago Law School graduate is a > well- known First Amendment scholar who specializes in religious issues.
> McConnell contends that the government engages in "anti- religious > discrimination [that] is blatantly unconstitutional." McConnell, 46, has > written that the 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th Circuits have all > incorrectly decided religious- speech cases. He is also critical of the > Supreme Court's handling of cases involving freedom of religion. Like > Scalia
> and Thomas, McConnell thinks that jurists should narrowly interpret the > Constitution's sweeping, but ambiguous, guarantees. In his view, the > Constitution protects neither the right to abortion nor gay and lesbian > civil rights.
>
> He supports school vouchers for students from low-income families. He > opposes finding a right to assisted suicide in the Constitution, and he > wrote a friend-of-the-court brief on the subject on behalf of Sen. Hatch > and
> Rep. Henry J. Hyde, R-Ill., and then-Rep. Charles Canady, R-Fla.
>
> In an article for the Institute on Religion and Public Life, McConnell > described Justices David Souter, Stephen Breyer, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, and > John Paul Stevens-the least conservative members of a Court that no longer > has a true left wing-as using "extremist rhetoric." He is active in the > Federalist Society and, with Hatch, sits on the board of the Becket Fund > for > Religious Liberty.
>
> Miguel A. Estrada, 39, is nominated for the prestigious D.C. Circuit, > which > often serves as a springboard to the Supreme Court. Estrada is a partner > at > Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, and his name was forwarded to Bush by law partner > Theodore Olson. Acquaintances consistently describe Estrada as > conservative.

> Ronald Klain, who clerked at the Supreme Court when Estrada was clerking
> for > Justice Anthony Kennedy, says Estrada has "a genuine compassionate > streak," > is an "independent thinker," and is "right of center." A former colleague > of > Estrada's, who asked not to be identified, complimented Estrada's legal > skills and said, "If we have to have someone that conservative, I would > prefer to have him."
>
> Otto Obermaier, Estrada's former boss at the U.S. Attorney's office in
the > Southern District of New York, praised his intellect. Estrada spent four > years in the Clinton Administration, arguing cases on behalf of the > government before the Supreme Court.
>
> During Estrada's stint at the Justice Department, Paul Bender served as > deputy Solicitor General. Bender, now an Arizona State University law > professor, says, however, he never assigned Estrada cases involving the > rights of women, homosexuals, or criminal defendants because "I didn't > trust > his judgment." Bender adds that Estrada's "ideological viewpoints are very > strong, similar to those of Scalia and Thomas ... and that causes his > judgment to be unbalanced."
>
> Bender compares Estrada with John G. Roberts, another D.C Circuit nominee.
> In Bender's view, both nominees are conservative, but Roberts is "much > more > balanced." Roberts, 46, is a partner at the law firm of Hogan & Hartson.
> He > served as Kenneth Starr's deputy at the Solicitor General's office from > 1989-93. During the Reagan Administration, Roberts counseled the President
> on constitutional issues and executive powers.
>
> Roberts is an extremely sought-after litigator who has represented a wide > range of clients before the Supreme Court and lower federal courts. In > 1995, > Roberts filed a brief in opposition to affirmative action. At issue in the > case of Adarand Constructors Inc. vs. Pena was whether a federal highway > program created by Congress to benefit minority-owned companies compels > racial discrimination. The 10th Circuit ruled that the government must > ensure that the minority contractors were previously disadvantaged in some > way and that no quotas were used. The Supreme Court has agreed to hear the > dispute.
>
> Roberts sits on the National Legal Center for the Public Interest's Legal > Advisory Council with Kenneth Starr, William Barr, Dick Thornburgh, Eugene
> Meyer of the Federalist Society, and C. Boyden Gray.
>
> Edith Brown Clement, known to her friends as Joy, is nominated to the 5th > Circuit. A U.S. district judge in Louisiana for 10 years, she has earned a > reputation for being earnest and tireless. Tulane professor John Kramer > says > that while Clement admires the jurisprudence of Scalia, she had not had
> the > opportunity to rule on the sort of controversies that might provide a good > gauge of her conservatism. Last year, Clement presided over the trial of > Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards, who was acquitted. Clement's command over > her > courtroom, including her threat to fine the governor $1,000 per word if he > violated a gag order for a second time, was widely reported. Kramer said > Clement has close ties to the Bush family, and according to an August 29, > 2000, New York Times article, Donald B. Ensenat, Bush's Yale fraternity > brother and roommate, recommended Clement for the district court slot.

>
> Priscilla R. Owen, also nominated to the 5th Circuit, was elected to the > Texas Supreme Court in 1994 and won re-election this past fall. She > practiced oil and gas law in Houston for 17 years. According to Texas > Supreme Court Justice Nathan Hecht, Owen, 46, is hardworking and > conservative. Hecht says that they sit together on the Austin Federalist > Society advisory board. Owen's most controversial act on the bench came in > March 2000 when she dissented from a 6-3 ruling nullifying the state's > parental notification law for girls seeking abortions.
>
> For the 6th Circuit, Bush has selected Deborah L. Cook, a justice on the > Ohio Supreme Court. Trial lawyer Nick Pittner, who has appeared before her > in Ohio school-funding cases, said, "If I had to rank Cook, she is by far > the most conservative justice in her views about the role of courts on > constitutional issues."
>
> In 1996, Cook wrote the 7-0 opinion overturning an injunction that barred > competing demonstrations by Holocaust survivors and white supremacists in > front of the home of former concentration camp guard John Demjanjuk. The > same year, she also wrote the majority opinion denying a blind woman's > request to be admitted to medical school. Cook wrote that forcing a > university to accommodate the blind woman's disability would have placed > an > undue burden on the school.
>
> Jeffrey S. Sutton, a partner at Jones , Day , Reavis & Pogue , earned his > stripes as a clerk to Supreme Court Justices Lewis F. Powell Jr. and > Scalia.
> As Ohio state solicitor, Sutton represented the Ohio Civil Rights > Commission > and presented arguments on behalf of the blind woman who wanted to attend > medical school. He has argued in support of school vouchers and on behalf > of > 33 states and the District of Columbia in opposition to making prisons > accommodate the disabled. In the prisons case, he successfully argued > before > the Supreme Court that Congress, in mandating that states help the > disabled,
> had exceeded its powers.
>
> Fourth Circuit nominees Dennis W. Shedd and Terrence W. Boyle have > backgrounds that, at least on paper, are very similar. Shedd, 48, is a > federal judge in South Carolina, a former chief counsel of the Senate > Judiciary Committee, and a former aide to Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C.
> Shedd > has a reputation for being tough as nails when sentencing defendants and
> for > insisting that the prosecution meet its burden, according to prominent > defense attorney Dick Harpootlian, a Democrat. Elizabeth Van Doren Gray, > another South Carolina lawyer , remarked, "A good many judges in this > state > are conservative."
>
> Boyle, 56, has been on the federal bench in North Carolina for 17 years
> and > previously had been a legislative assistant to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.
> Earlier this year, Boyle dismissed charges against a defendant accused of > running an $18 million fraudulent investment scheme because the prosecutor > missed a deadline. In 1996, Boyle invalidated a deal reached in a job > discrimination case. In that deal, the government had agreed to recruit > women as correctional officers and pay $5.5 million to those already > passed > over for employment and promotions.

>
> The U.S. Supreme Court has twice overturned Boyle rulings in a > redistricting > case in which he invalidated a congressional district's boundaries because > he thought race had played an unconstitutional role in drawing those > lines.
> In April, when Boyle was most recently overruled, Chief Justice William > Rehnquist and Justices Scalia, Thomas, and Kennedy dissented.
>
> The makeup of the federal courts is constantly changing as judges retire, > take senior status, or die, and new judges are appointed. But the politics > of the nomination and confirmation process during the Clinton > Administration
> wreaked havoc on the system and left 31 appeals court slots unfilled.
> Democrats, at least theoretically, hold the cards on who will fill 14 of
> the > 31 vacancies. The Senate's unwritten rules allow a Senator to issue a > "blue > slip," essentially a blackball, on any judicial nominee from his or her > home

> What remains to be seen is how far Bush will try to go in turning the > federal judiciary further to the right, and how far the Senate's Democrats

I think we should decide as a whole whether or not to provide anything beyond the press release -- it might look odd if we provide some but not others. I vote against providing resumes.

If you are interested in providing your resume/bio to Douglas McCollam please email this to me by 12:00 noon on Monday.

I'll also send to him a copy of the press release(s) issued announcing the hiring of counsel staff.

Thanks!

We know nothing more than is what on those lists as to vacancies except in some rare situations where we hear rumors that someone may take senior status, etc.

Subject: Attempting new POTUS mtg. time

We are shooting for 5:00-5:40 on Tuesday, May 22nd.

If this 5:00 Tuesday time works out the binder needs to be in Staff Secretary's office absolutely no later than 2:00 pm on Monday.

If Judge is supposed to review/approve this then he needs the binder early on Monday as he is out of the office from 11:15am until 2:00 pm.

As soon as I get confirmation from scheduling I'll let you know.

Thanks!

Here's another one - I have several bills from Airlift Ops for the First Lady's meals on an airplane when she is traveling separately from the POTUS. Is this considered personal - or does the purpose of the trip determine the paying entity? vbm

The Judge and Tim have requested three additional long-form memoranda of the kind we all prepared a few weeks back. They have asked me and Brett to search for volunteers to do another round. Anyone not overwhelmed in the next few weeks and willing to take this on?

Bob Bork is trying to track down photos of the Bush judicial nominees. Is it possible to send us either by e-mail or courier a set of head shot photographs for the 11 Bush court nominees? I have found 5 already on the web but if you have an entire set that would be helpful. If you can't help, can you point me in the right direction? Thanks!

In response to your questions on cars to the RNC event, I conferred with Brett who confirmed that, if someone took a car pit car to the RNC event last night, there needs to be reimbursement from the RNC. This rule would not apply to the motorcade, however.

As a general matter, no one should take car pit cars to political events (other than Card, Rice, or others who may need access to secure communications); but if someone does so, there must be reimbursement.
Card, Rice, et al. likewise must reimburse for trips made to the political events.

Brett, correct me if I have misstated anything or have oversimplified it.

How many Supreme Court Justices have there been? How many and which ones had prior service in the United States Congress before becoming Justices? I believe it is about 20, but I need an exact list. Thx.

I looked at the issue re the CDF when I was in Texas but Toner was lead on it.

I realize his message is not about the links issue. Noel's e mail spurred my faint recollection that you had looked into the internet copyright issues in answering the links question.

In any event, who wants to address the trademark question?

Subject: Re: here is noel's e mail

The question (see below, e-mail from Mike Shannon) is whether the fact that there is a group by the name "communities of character" causes a trademark problem for us if the WH uses the same phrase in a different context.
It's the same as the question about whether we could use the No Child Left Behind phrase even though the Children's Defense Fund uses a similar motto.
Noel and I thought you had dealt with Toner (or somebody) on that issue.

As I read the question in the e-mail from Mike Shannon, the question has nothing to do with weblinks.

as you can see, the question does not involve the Ed Bill. It's more related to the question Vance brought to us a while back on use (in that case by links) of website material.

Subject: Communites of Character Question

Brett,

Per our discussion this afternoon, we (the Office of Strategic Initiatives) are currently helping plan for a fall presidential initiative that is tentatively entitled "Communities of Character" (it would serve as an umbrella for programs/rhetoric relating to renewing America's values/civic life). During our research, I came across the web site of an organization named Communities of Character. We need guidance from your office on any copyright/trademark issues that might arise as a result of that group's existence. The web site link is below. Please let me know if any further information would be helpful. A senior staff working group is meeting early next week on this initiative, so having an answer by the weekend would be great if possible. Thank you.

Attached are talking points on tonight's agreement on tax relief.

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <F_EHO42004_NSC.TXT_1>

Bipartisan Results For Real, Meaningful Tax Relief

Tax relief this year, and for the next 10 years

- For the last decade the American people have seen government take an increasing share of their personal income. Today, and for the next 10 years, because Democrats and Republicans are working together, help is on the way.

- Americans have overpaid their government – and they're about to get a refund.

- This is a victory for the American people, and the credit belongs to all who helped make it happen – Democrats and Republicans alike.

- The bipartisan agreement provides an immediate jump-start to our economy, puts money back in people's pockets this year when they need it most, and gives every American who pays taxes a tax cut.

- Americans will get refund checks this year, and their tax bills will continue to go down for the next 10 years. This fall single taxpayers will get a $300 refund check, single parents will receive a $500 refund check, and married taxpayers will get a $600 refund check.

- The bipartisan agreement contains every major element of the President's tax relief plan. This agreement represents the largest tax cut in 20 years.

  - ✓ Cuts taxes for all taxpayers in all tax rates.
  - ✓ Repeals the death tax.
  - ✓ Provides relief from the marriage penalty.
  - ✓ Doubles the child tax credit to $1,000 to help parents with the high costs of raising children.

- Only 125 days into his Administration, the President and Congress have achieved together what just a few months ago seemed impossible. They said it couldn't be done. But President Bush knew it could be done if Republicans and Democrats would work together.

- Other key provisions:

  - ✓ Expands the earned income credit and makes the child credit refundable to put money in the hands of millions of families with children.
  - ✓ Helps Americans save more for their retirement tax-free by raising IRA contribution limits.
  - ✓ Simplifies our tax code.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes on small businessmen and women.
  - ✓ Cuts taxes to help families save for their children's education.

- The President thanks both Democrats and Republicans in Congress for working with him in good faith to help send the American people a refund – so that they can have more of their hard-earned dollars to save, invest and build as they choose.

- The new bipartisan consensus on tax relief should serve as the model for future bipartisan accomplishments. This shared success is only the beginning.

Our research indicates that, ever since the ABA was brought into the judicial appointment process during the Eisenhower administration, no person over 65 has been appointed to the Courts of Appeal. Up until the 1980s, the ABA gave an automatic "not qualified" rating to anybody over 65. The rule was abandoned when President Reagan came into office; it was thought indelicate, given Reagan's age. Nevertheless, even after the rule's formal demise, we can't find an example of a person over 65 being named to a circuit court.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start

more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

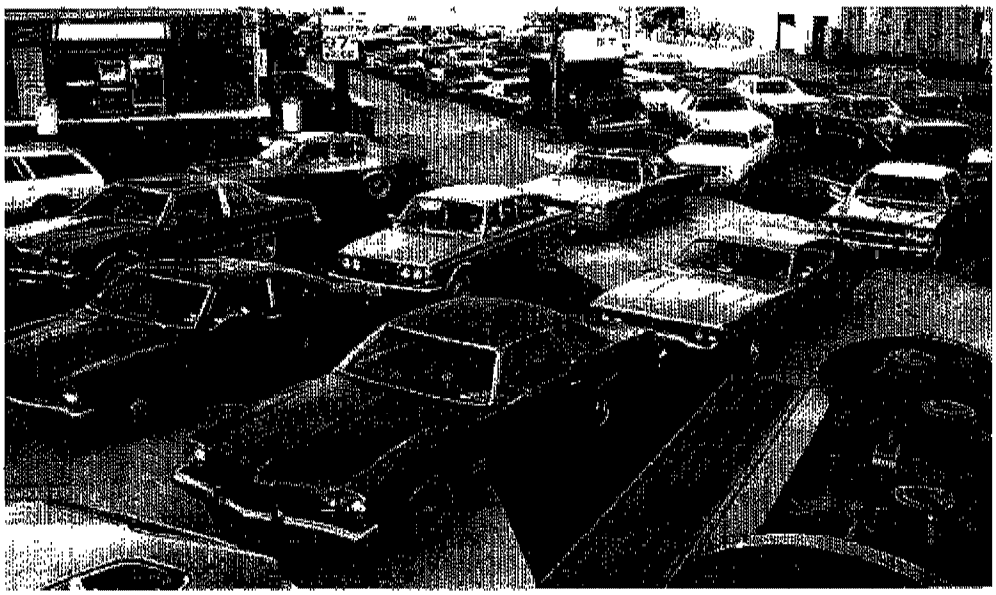
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start

more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

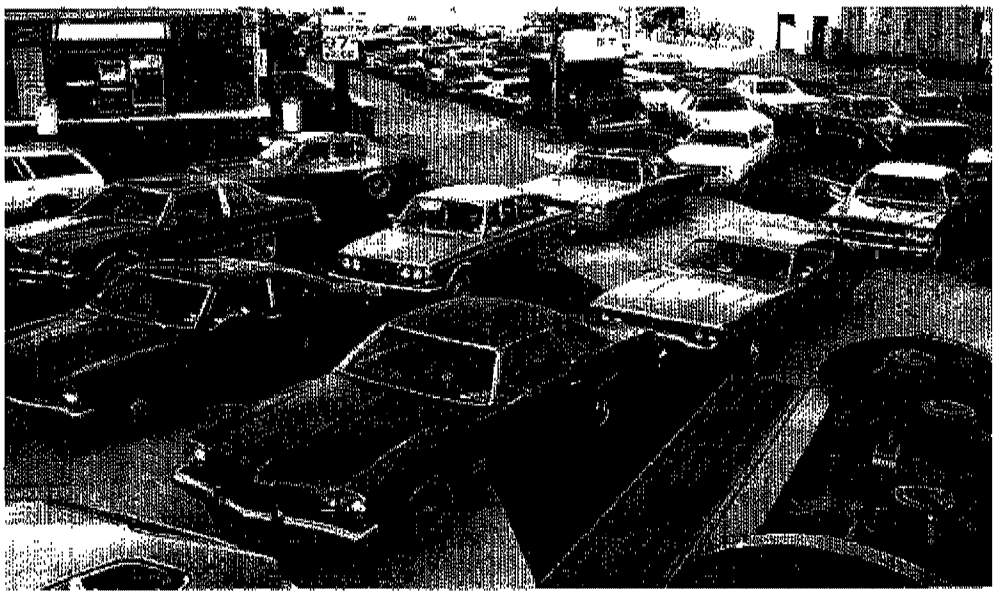
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

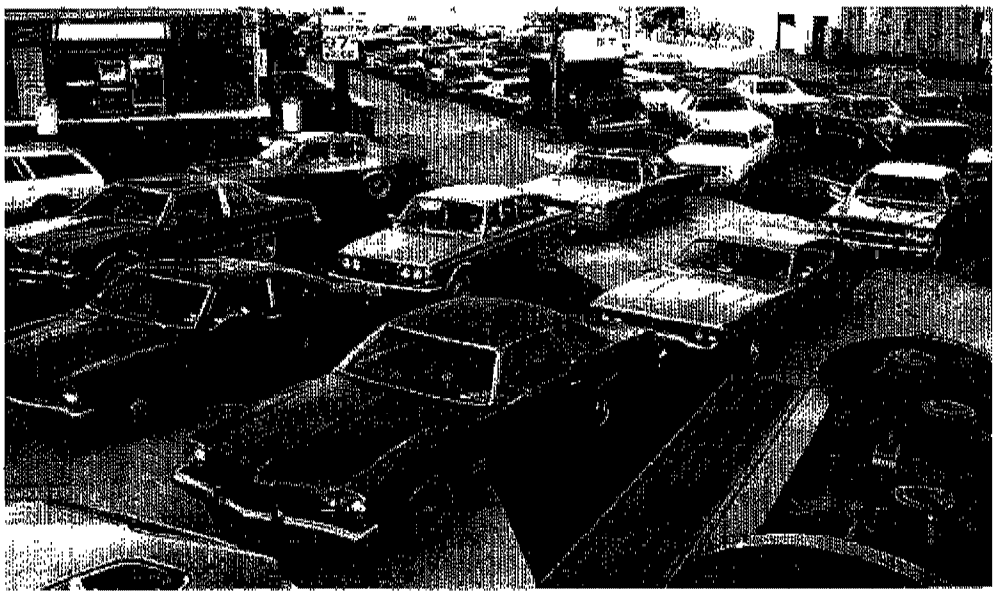
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

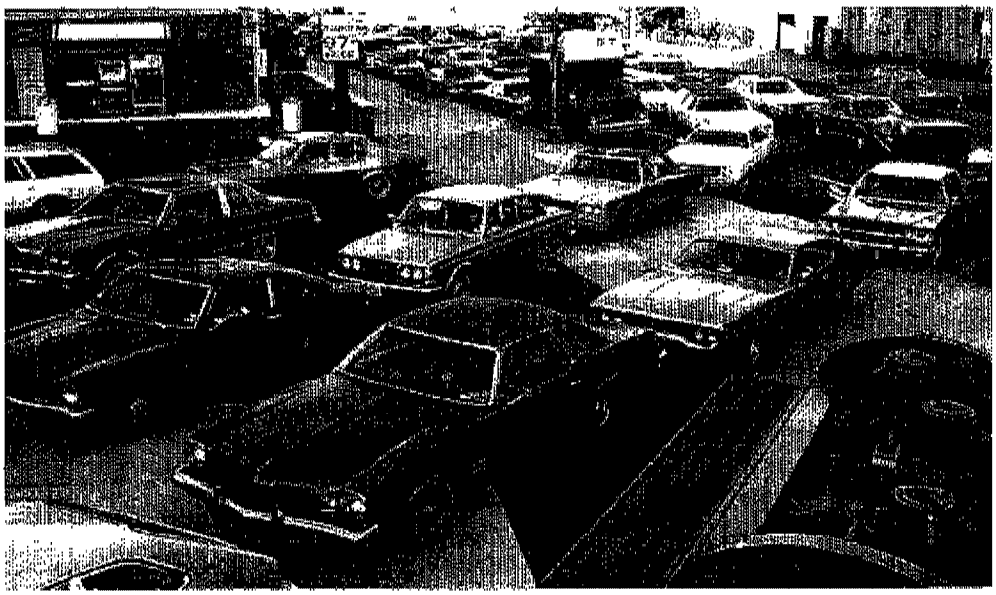
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

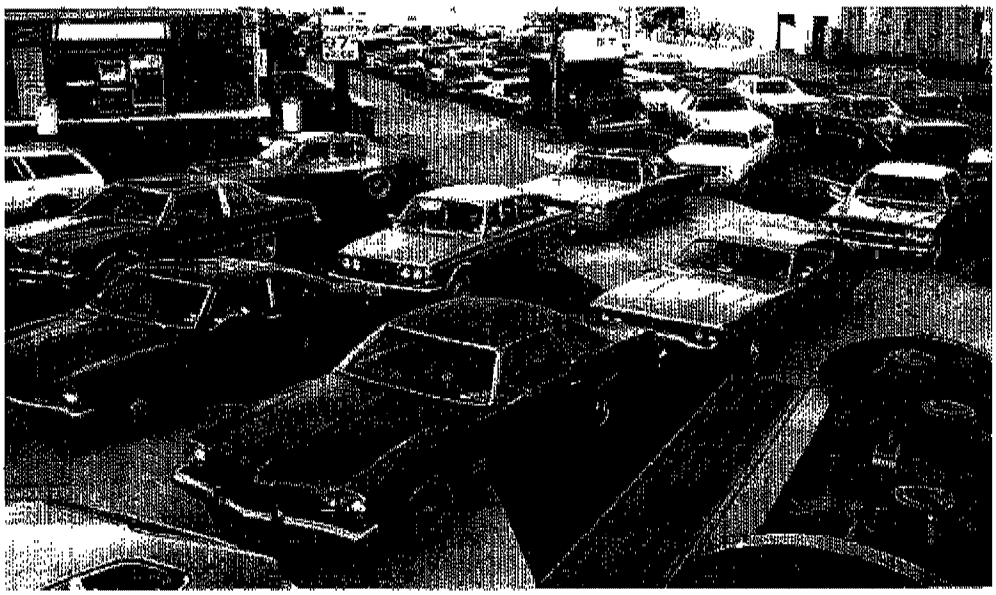
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

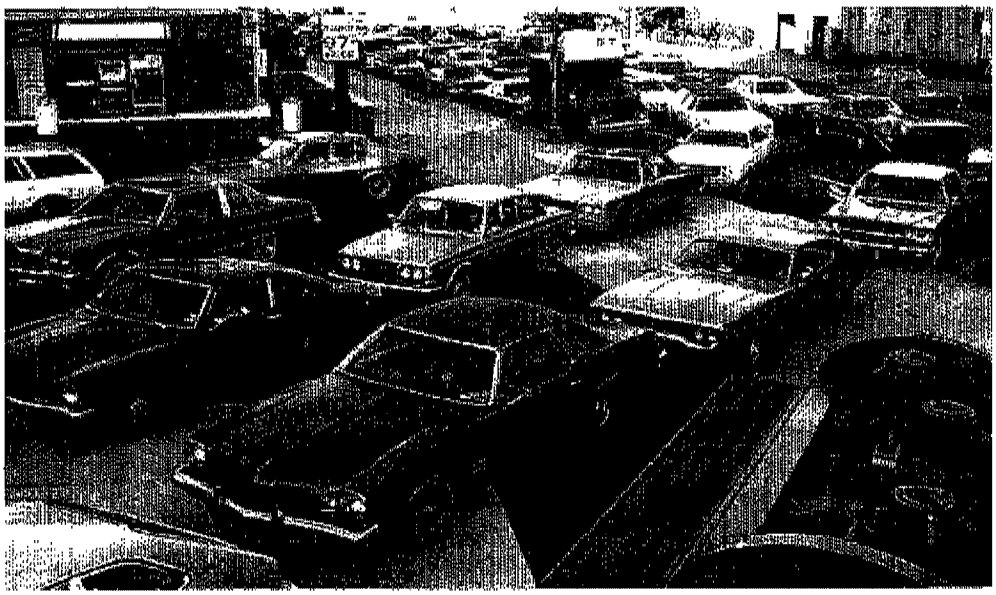
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

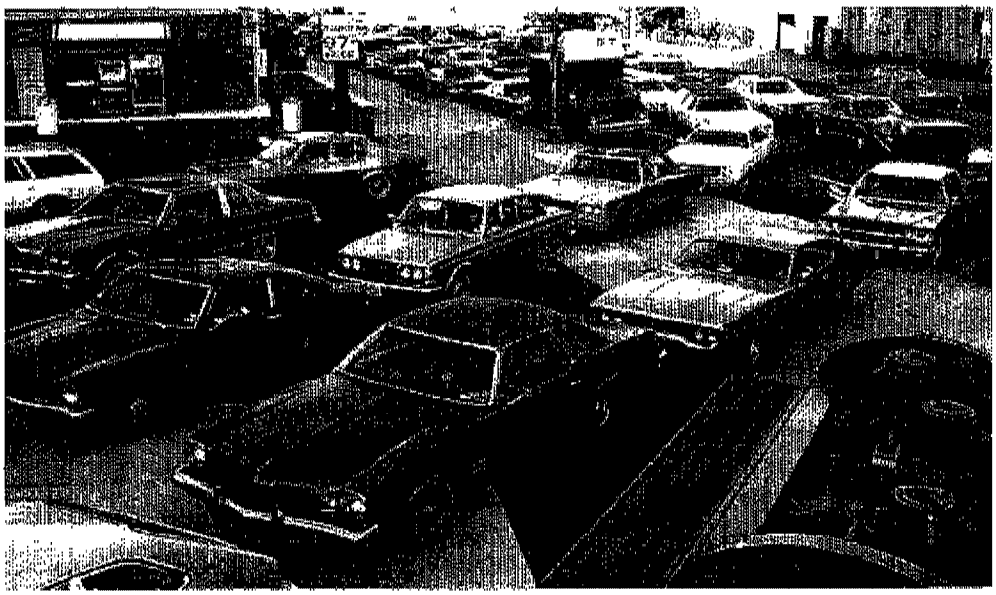
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies

to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

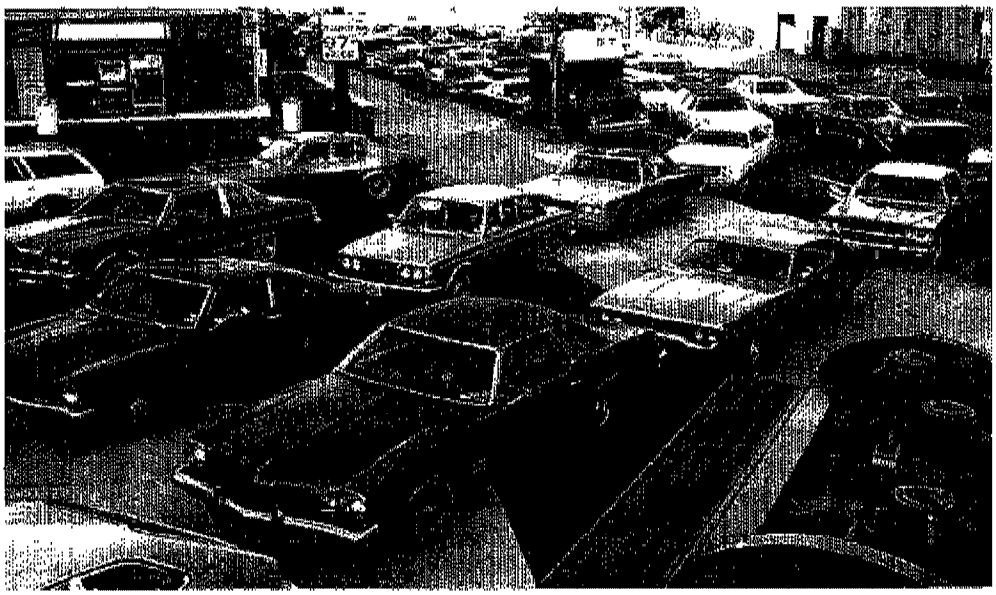
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

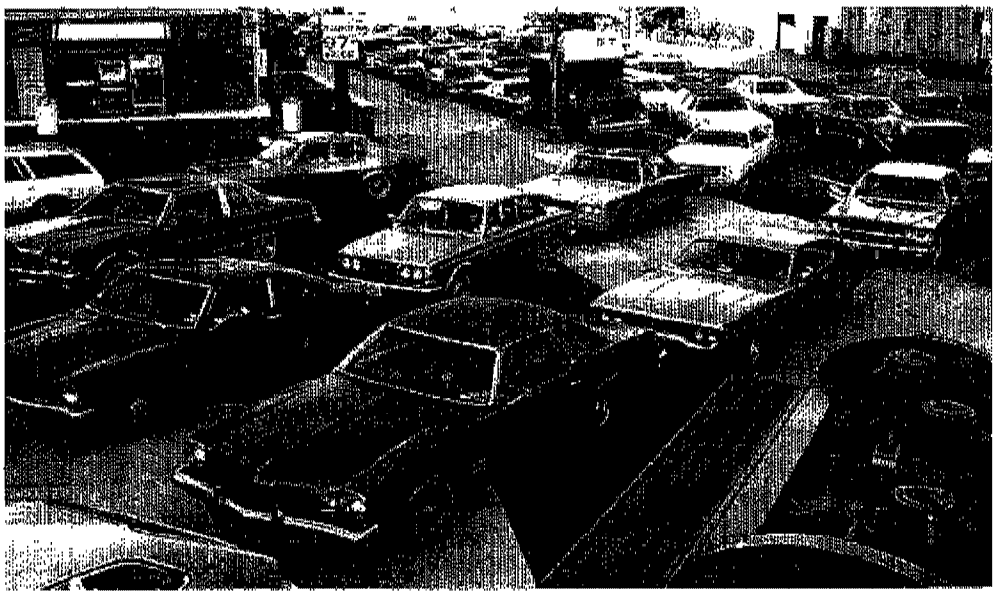
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies

to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

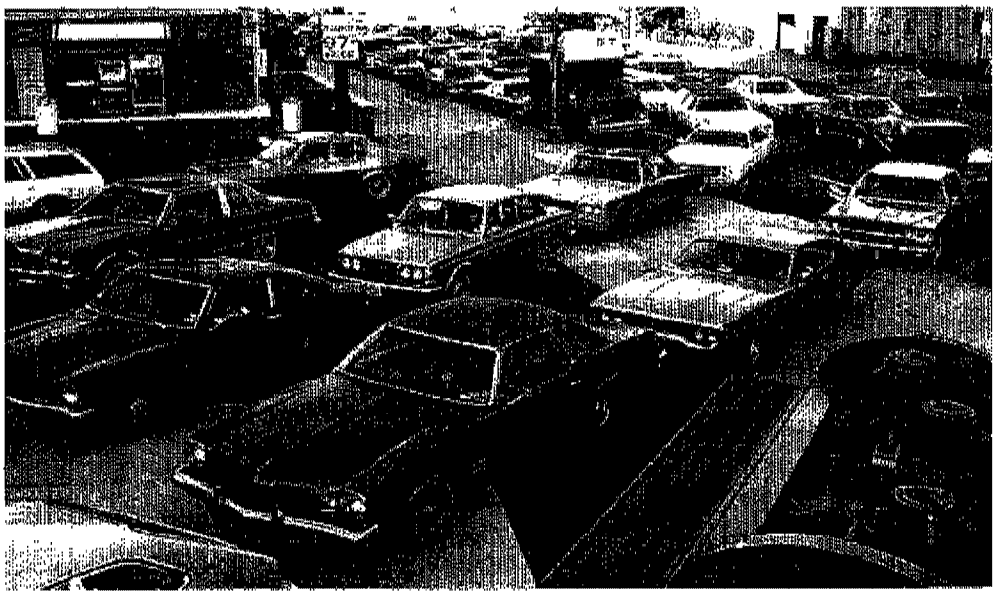
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

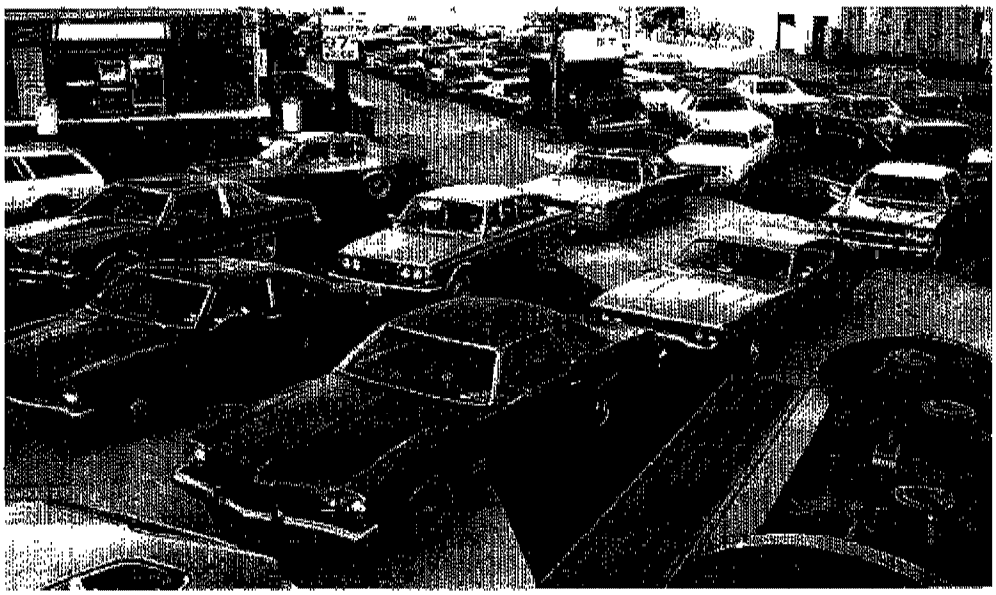
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Subject: The President's National Parks Legacy Project

Domestic Policy has drafted the attached document outlining the President's National Parks Legacy Project that he will discuss today in California.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

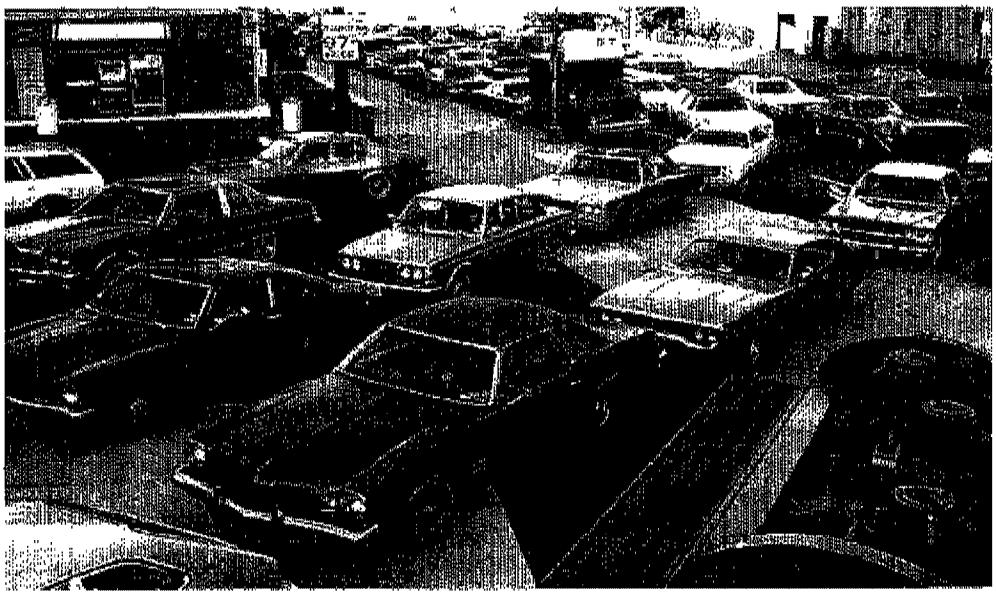
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

End Original ARMS Header

attached find a media advisory regarding today's 1 pm press conference launching the 21st Century Energy Project, of which I am executive director.
the groups at today's event at the nat'l press club include ATR, CSE, ACU, 60+, Frontiers of Freedom and others. if you plan on attending, skip the red
meat at lunch.

we have a full page ad in the fresno bee today to support the president's

visit, a fax copy of which is attached. john peschong helpfully got copies to the filing center. it will also be in roll call tomorrow, and we'll start
more ads when congress returns.

my draft opening statement is also attached. it's a good example of the tone we've been trying to change!

best, ed g.

Thank you for coming.

The organizations assembled here today have agreed to work together on the 21st Century Energy Project to provide a counterbalance to the scathing, misleading assault on the first effort we have seen in this country in 20 years to enact a balanced energy policy.

Often flying under the false banner of environmental protection or conservation, groups like the Sierra Club and the National Resources Defense Council--not to mention Greenpeace--have become little more than outside resources for the Democratic National Committee. They were poised to echo the attacks of the DNC and congressional Democrats they supported in the last campaign weeks before the Bush Administration even unveiled its energy initiative. Ultimately, 40 of the plan's 105 recommendations ended up focusing on increasing conservation, but they did not let that fact change their plan.

They reflexively oppose any plan that would increase traditional forms of energy production as a means by which to restore the imbalance between our nation's demand for energy and its supply. They do so in the most cynical political fashion, branding every abundant and affordable source of energy as a threat to clean air or clean water in order to frighten policy makers by frightening suburban women swing voters.

Rarely do these groups acknowledge--nor are they asked--how they would meet the demand necessary for Americans to maintain higher standards of living over the next 20 years in the absence of greater domestic production. The answer is that they would not. They would instead reduce demand by government fiat.

Their agenda includes:

higher energy prices (which former Vice President Al Gore touted in his book and which the Democratic congress voted for in the form of a BTU tax),

excessive regulations that have prohibited construction of an oil refinery in the United States for nearly 25 years and no major new generating plant in California in a decade,

government control of existing power lines and energy plants,

and artificial price caps that can only result in government rationing of energy usage--just as it did in the '70s under Jimmy Carter.

These liberal elites chide us on the need to mandate people into smaller, less safe "more fuel-efficient cars" as Dick Gephardt railed at a press conference earlier this month--a press conference at which he arrived in his Chevy Suburban.

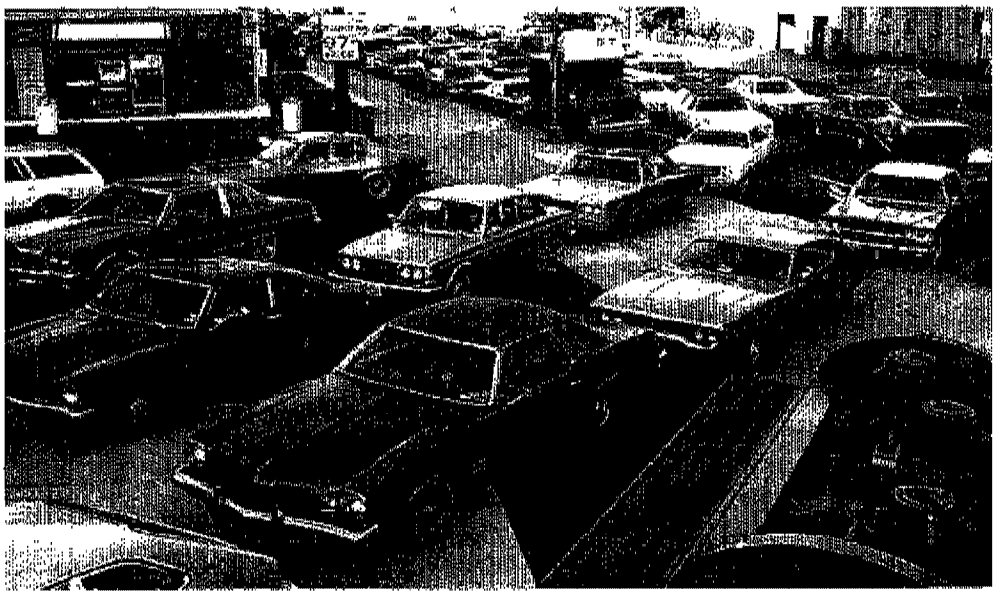
They believe oil, gas, coal and nuclear energy are inherently bad, and that working Americans are the problem here because we use too much of it. Theirs is a world view of scarcity, where innovations in clean coal technology, precision drilling and advancements in nuclear energy and safety simply never happened. They are stuck in a time warp, waiting with baited breath for Jackson Brown and Bonnie Raitt to hold their next No Nukes rally.

"That '70s Show" is entertaining on television every Tuesday night, but a little tired on the floor of the House of Representatives every weekday morning.

We believe in conservation. It makes a lot of sense. It's good economics. But conservation alone won't keep the lights on. California ranks second in the nation in energy conservation, but its consumption has risen 11.3% over the past decade while its production has declined 1.7%. Without a balanced approach, supply will drop and prices will rise. Seniors on fixed incomes will be forced to limit their energy use. Blackouts will continue to roll. And all of us will feel the decline in a quality of life that is directly tied to our quantity of energy.

In the coming months, the 21st Century Energy Project will serve as a clearinghouse for information on energy policy from a market-oriented approach and an understanding that higher levels of domestic production and environmental sensitivity are not mutually exclusive in the 21stCentury.

REMEMBER THE '70s?



Gas Lines were long, rationing was in, Jimmy Carter was President and he told us to wear a sweater.

Liberal elites think that's still the answer.

The last time we faced an energy crisis Jimmy Carter was President. Two decades ago, over-dependence on foreign oil created a shortage and drove prices up. The solution was rationing. It was a bad idea.

Today, we are again becoming too dependent on foreign oil when demand for oil and electricity consumption is increasing. This is simple Economics 101: when demand increases faster than supply, prices go up.

Liberal groups and some politicians believe rationing, price caps, higher taxes and excessive regulations will solve the problem. We disagree.

Their policies will only decrease supply and further increase prices. That hurts lower and middle class families the most. In fact, if some on the left have their way, "soccer moms" will be forced to sell their mini-vans – they'll become a luxury only the elite can afford.

Conservation alone won't keep the lights on.

California ranks as the second best state in energy conservation. If conservation alone could solve the problem, California wouldn't be facing high rates and rolling blackouts.

The 21st Century Energy Project rejects the premise that we can conserve our way out of this energy shortage. A balance between conservation and increased supply is the only solution. We support an energy policy based on sound science and a rational, balanced, market-oriented approach that will ensure affordable energy for all Americans.

That's why we applaud President Bush's approach - a balanced, comprehensive 105-point plan that includes over 40 recommendations that increase conservation, as well as a diversified proposal to reduce dependence on foreign oil while using 21st Century technology to produce clean, abundant and affordable energy.

21st Century Energy Project to Launch Wednesday

New Project Will Educate Public on Domestic Energy Proposals

WASHINGTON, D.C. – In response to the national energy policy debate, a new coalition will be launched Wednesday. The 21st Century Energy Project (21CEP) will educate the public on the impact various energy policies will have on Americans' quality of life.

The 21st Century Energy Project seeks to coordinate the resources of organizations committed to striking a balance between our nation's energy supply and demand. Member organizations are devoted to finding a sensible approach to the energy policy debate that protects America's future and security, and exposing the negative impact of the liberal energy agenda.

The 21CEP will serve as a counterbalance to the liberal groups who oppose increased energy production and seek government-mandated reductions in energy consumption.

At the launch event, an ad campaign will be unveiled.

The use of the word "court packing" in this context is really getting old.

On that note, William Safire's column in this past Sunday's NY Times magazine (below):

Judge Fights: Is 'Borking' Needed to Stop 'Court Packing'?

'Borking' is out. 'Court packing' is in." So wrote E.J. Dionne Jr. in The Washington Post, using two of the great politico-judicial attack phrases in rapid succession. Comes now the etymology to help readers rap their gavels when slanted words joust with each other.
The notion of court packing can be traced to Lincoln, who wanted a 10th justice on the Supreme Court, and before that to John Adams, whose nominations of "midnight judges" just before he left office caused a ruckus with his successor, Thomas Jefferson, who refused to swear them in.
The phrase packing the Court -- always pejorative, imputing one-sidedness -- burst on the scene in 1936 in criticism of President Franklin Roosevelt's plan to appoint a new Supreme Court justice every time one of the "nine old men" (a phrase coined by the columnists Drew Pearson and Robert S. Allen) reached the age of 70 and refused to step down.
But the president was seen to have overreached, and his plan backfired; even on the verge of a landslide re-election, F.D.R. was put on the defensive. "If by that phrase 'packing the Court' it is charged," he said, "that I wish to place on the bench spineless puppets who would disregard the law and would decide specific cases as I wished them to be decided, I make this answer: that no president fit for his office would appoint, and no Senate of honorable men fit for their office would confirm, that kind of appointee to the Supreme Court."

F.D.R.'s proposal, universally denounced as court packing, died in committee; however, the balance of power on the Court soon shifted to the liberals, causing one wag to note, "A switch in time saved nine."
Turnabout is fair play. The phrase is now the rallying cry of Democrats worried that Bush nominees to the federal bench at all levels will make the court system more conservative. Said Senator Pat Leahy of Vermont, ranking Democrat on the Judiciary Committee, "It sure looks like they are intent on building an ideologically driven court-packing machine." Bruce Ackerman, a professor of law at Yale, writing in The Los Angeles Times, added a note of breathlessness: "We are on the brink of a court-packing crisis."
Republicans are countering with the eponymous verb possibly first used in The Atlanta Journal-Constitution on Aug. 20, 1987: "Let's just hope something enduring results for the justice-to-be, like a new verb: Borked. Dictionaries will say it's synonymous with 'maligned."' This referred to the way Democrats savaged Ronald Reagan's nominee, the Appeals Court judge Robert H. Bork, the year before.
"A concerted effort to 'Bork' John Ashcroft would not be well received," said Senator Trent Lott, the majority leader, about George W. Bush's nomination for attorney general. The newly nonconfrontational Ashcroft was not borked. (I use the lowercase b now that the verb is established, but then I lowercase draconian and stentorian, over the objections of the strict solon Draco and the Greek herald with the booming voice, Stentor.)
The columnist Fred Barnes went to the eponym himself for a definition. "What it means is to be attacked with a series of -- not to put it too strongly -- a series of lies and mischaracterizations," Bork said. "And it is an effort at the politics of personal destruction."
Debate rages over whether the confirmation criteria should be character and merit, or whether an otherwise estimable nominee should be rejected for holding views that some activists believe are outside the ideological mainstream. It may be that senators will vote on the basis of ideology without getting personal. But in coming months, Democrats will charge Bush with court packing; returning the fire, Bush will deplore borking.

editorial
Tymkovich should serve well

Wednesday, May 30, 2001 - We hope the new Democratic majority on the U.S. Senate will set aside partisan politics when it considers Denver attorney Tim Tymkovich's nomination to serve on the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.
But we also hope the American Bar Association will continue to voluntarily scrutinize all nominees headed to the Senate, even though the Bush administration stripped the ABA of its official role in screening judicial candidates prior to their nomination.
Tymkovich should be no exception, though he has gained a local reputation as a thoughtful, insightful attorney who knows the law and works hard to uphold it.

He first gained real notice when, as state solicitor general, he was assigned to defend Amendment 2, a Colorado initiative that would have banned laws to protect gays.

Then-Attorney General Gale Norton was legally obliged to defend the amendment. The fact that the U.S. Supreme Court rejected this sloppily worded and unconstitutional amendment doesn't reflect on Tymkovich's legal skills or politics.

Indeed, Jean Dubofsky, a former Colorado Supreme Court justice who successfully led the legal challenge against Amendment 2, supports Tymkovich's nomination.

Tymkovich is only 44, but he has been practicing law in the public and private arenas since 1982 and is a long-time member of the American Bar Association, the American Law Institute and the International Society of Barristers.

He also is a member of the Federalist Society, which comes as no surprise considering how that group's conservative, Libertarian orientation dovetails with the conservative slant of the Bush administration.

Still, we don't expect Bush to be nominating liberal Democrats to lifelong positions on the federal bench anytime soon. And Tymkovich is far less conservative than his fellow nominee to the 10th U.S. Circuit Court.

Michael McConnell, a law professor at the University of Utah, has defended vouchers for religious schools and argued to reinterpret the Constitution's division between church and state.

The conservative Christian's experience in public law is far deeper than Tymkovich's, but his reputation as an ideologue likely will stymie his chances with the Senate.

While we cannot support McConnell, we urge the Senate to confirm Tymkovich to fill a seat that has sat vacant since 1999, when Judge John Porfilio took senior status.

We also encourage the Senate to carefully defend the judiciary from any Bush efforts at "court packing," whereby nominees are selected for their political philosophy rather than their legal expertise.

Federal judges and justices are obligated to carefully apply the law of the land, not the politics of the president in power.

Brett--Per the attached e-mail, we are prepared to have future bulk e-mail to the President (and First Lady) sent only to the WHO bucket, as opposed to both the WHO and OA buckets, since these are not OA records. Of course we can make more changes in the future (such as a system that would allow disposal of bulk e-mail akin to its paper counterpart) if the White House would like to take that course at some later date.

Since this solution could also be applied to bulk e-mail to the Vice President and Mrs. Cheney, I thought it would be a good idea to mention this to David so we can do this at this same time (understanding that it's possible that there may be some differences). David, it would be great if you can also indicate if you would like us to proceed along the same course as the White House. Adam, 5-1268

Adam;

We can change the designation of the sending account in NOTES so that NOTES will indicate to ARMS that the account has no agency designation. This will then cause ARMS to place the POTUS bulk mail in the WHO bucket only and the Vpotus mail in the VPO bucket only.

Let me know when you want me to make that happen.

FYI,

Attached below is a copy of the amendments that the House Government Reform Committee adopted in its mark-up of HR 577 on May 17th. The reported text is not yet available on THOMAS. As I've said in earlier e-mails, this bill could go to the floor as early as next week.

Thanks

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE TO H.R. 577

OFFERED BY M. Burton

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. REQUIREMENT TO DISCLOSE SOURCES AND AMOUNTS OF FUNDS RAISED FOR PRESIDENTIAL ARCHIVAL DEPOSITORY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2112 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Any organization that is established for the purpose of raising funds for creating, maintaining, expanding, or conducting activities at a Presidential archival depository or any facilities relating to a Presidential archival depository, shall submit to the Administration, the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate on an annual basis information with respect to every contributor who, during the year—

"(A) with respect to a Presidential archival depository of a President who currently holds the Office of President or for which the Archivist has not accepted, taken title to, or entered into an agreement to use any land or facility, gave the organization a contribution or contributions (whether monetary or in-kind) totaling $200 or more for the year; or

"(B) with respect to a Presidential archival depository of a President who no longer holds the Office of President and for which the Archivist has accepted, taken title to, or entered into an agreement to use any land or facility, gave the organization a contribution or contributions (whether monetary or in-kind) totaling $5000 or more for the year.

"(2) As used in this subsection, the term 'information' means, with respect to a contribution described in paragraph (1), the following:

"(A) The amount or value of the contribution.

"(B) The source of the contribution, and the address of the entity or individual that is the source of the contribution.

"(C) If the source of the contribution is an individual, the occupation of the individual.

"(3) The Archivist shall make available to the public through the Internet (or a successor technology readily available to the public) any information that is submitted in accordance with paragraph (1).

"(4) It shall be unlawful for any person who makes a contribution described in paragraph (1) to knowingly and willfully submit false material information or omit material information with respect to the contribution to an organization described in such paragraph, and the penalties described in section 1001 of title 18, United States Code, shall apply with respect to such a false submission or omission in the same manner as a violation described in such section.

"(5) It shall be unlawful for any organization described in paragraph (1) to knowingly and willfully submit false material information or omit material information under such paragraph, and the penalties described in section 1001 of title 18, United States Code, shall apply with respect to such a false submission or omission in the same manner as a violation described in such section.

"(6) No person shall make a contribution described in paragraph (1) in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution described in such paragraph made by one person in the name of another person. In the case of a knowing and willful violation of the preceding sentence, the penalties set forth in section 309(d) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 (2 U.S.C. 437g(d)) shall apply to such violation in the same manner as if such violation were a violation of section 316(b)(3) of such Act.

REV_00127230

"(7) The Archivist shall promulgate regulations for the purpose of carrying out this subsection.".

(b) APPLICABILITY.—Section 2112(h) of title 44, United States Code (as added by subsection (a))—

(1) shall apply to an organization established for the purpose of raising funds for creating, maintaining, expanding, or conducting activities at a Presidential archival depository or any facilities relating to a Presidential archival depository before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(2) shall only apply with respect to contributions (whether monetary or in-kind) made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

REV_00127231

Amend the title so as to read: "To amend title 44, United States Code, to require any organization that is established for the purpose of raising funds for creating, maintaining, expanding, or conducting activities at a Presidential archival depository or any facilities relating to a Presidential archival depository to disclose the sources and amounts of any funds raised, and for other purposes.".

FYI, and OLC probably advised you of this already, but Rosemary Hart recently gave me a call to say there are looking to hire some (2-3) young line attorneys. She was looking for recommendations of "clerk types" 1-2 years out of law school, but I did not really know of any people in that age/experience range.

Brett--Per the attached e-mail, we are prepared to have future bulk e-mail to the President (and First Lady) sent only to the WHO bucket, as opposed to both the WHO and OA buckets, since these are not OA records. Of course we can make more changes in the future (such as a system that would allow disposal of bulk e-mail akin to its paper counterpart) if the White House would like to take that course at some later date.

Since this solution could also be applied to bulk e-mail to the Vice President and Mrs. Cheney, I thought it would be a good idea to mention this to David so we can do this at this same time (understanding that it's possible that there may be some differences). David, it would be great if you can also indicate if you would like us to proceed along the same course as the White House. Adam, 5-1268

Adam;

We can change the designation of the sending account in NOTES so that NOTES will indicate to ARMS that the account has no agency designation. This will then cause ARMS to place the POTUS bulk mail in the WHO bucket only and the Vpotus mail in the VPO bucket only.

Let me know when you want me to make that happen.

Elizabeth:

At the request of Helgard Walker and with the approval of Brett Kavanaugh, I am providing you with the following information regarding files of Jerold Mande who, I understand, was detailed to OPD during the Clinton Administration but worked out of an office assigned to OSTP.

The six boxes that we received from him in December 1998 were assigned the following box numbers in our data base:

13,033, 13,034, 13,035, 13,036, 13,037, and 13,038.
We subsequently assigned them shelf location numbers when we sent them to NARA for courtesy storage. Those sequential numbers ran from 10,455 through 10,460.

This should be more than sufficient information for the archivists at the Clinton project to locate these boxes.

Terry

March 23, 2001

Dear Mr. Carlin:

Section 2(b) of Executive Order 12667, issued by former President Ronald Reagan on January 16, 1989, requires the Archivist of the United States to delay release of Presidential records at the instruction of the current President.

On behalf of the President, I instruct you to extend for 90 days (until June 21, 2001) the time in which President Bush may claim a constitutionally based privilege over the Presidential records that former President Reagan, acting under Section 2204(a) of Title 44, has protected from disclosure for the 12 years since the end of his Presidency. This directive applies as well to the Vice Presidential records of former Vice President George H.W. Bush.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

MEMORANDUM FOR ANDREW CARD

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES, COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT BRETT KAVANAUGH, ASSOCIATE COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

CC: KAREN HUGHES KARL ROVE
NICHOLAS CALIO

SUBJECT: PRESIDENTIAL RECORDS ACT—REAGAN RECORDS OPENING

As you know, the Presidential Records Act of 1978 applies to certain official documents created or received by the President and other White House officials. At the end of a President's Administration, the Archivist of the United States takes control of the Presidential records.

Under the Act, the Archivist must open many documents for public release beginning 12 years after the end of the President's term (or second term in the event of a two-term Presidency). The Act specifically provides, however, that it shall not be construed to "confirm, limit, or expand any constitutionally-based privilege which may be available to an incumbent or former President." 44 U.S.C. 2204(c)(2). As Senator Percy stated at the time the Presidential Records Act was enacted in 1978, moreover, "[t]o what extent the concept of 'executive privilege' protects the confidentiality of a former or incumbent President's communications with his advisers is an open question. If some future President believes that the 12-year closure period does not suffice, that President could object to the release of some document in the 13th or 15th or 20th year." Cong. Record S36844 (Oct. 13, 1978).

Many documents from President Reagan's Administration are now subject to public release because the 12-year non-disclosure period has elapsed. We have been advised by President Reagan's representatives that many extraordinarily sensitive documents may be publicly released absent a legislative fix to this statute or an Executive privilege claim by either or both President Reagan and President Bush.

As a matter of law, both the former President (or his representatives) and the current President may raise and support a privilege claim as to a former President's documents. The views of the current President are considered far weightier, however, because they are believed to reflect the long-term interests of the Executive Branch. As the Supreme Court stated in a case involving President Nixon's papers, "the fact that neither President Ford nor President Carter supports [Nixon's] claim detracts from the weight of his contention that the Act impermissibly intrudes into the executive function and the needs of the Executive Branch. This necessarily follows, for it must be presumed that the incumbent President is vitally concerned with and in the best position to assess the present and future needs of the Executive Branch, and to support invocation of the privilege accordingly." Nixon v. GSA, 433 U.S. 425, 449 (1978).

Since the Act took effect in 1981, this is the first time that the 12-year period from the end of a Presidency has elapsed. Yet the constitutional questions that Senator Percy identified in 1978 remain quite unsettled today. Therefore, the decision that President Bush makes on this constitutional issue – whether to assert a privilege over some or all of the Reagan documents in question -- likely will set an important precedent for future Presidents.

Finally, it bears emphasis that there is a possibility of seeking a legislative solution to this matter. The Presidential Records Act provides that certain Freedom of Information Act exemptions (national security, personal privacy, and the like) continue to apply even after the 12-year period has expired. But Congress eliminated the most critical FOIA exemption – the so-called (b)(5) exemption that protects documents reflecting the internal deliberative processes of the Executive Branch. If exemption (b)(5) were restored to the President Records Act and applied to the potential release of documents after the 12-year period had elapsed, there likely would be no need for a constitutional privilege claim now or in the future.

Given the importance of the issue to the long-term interests of the Executive Branch, I intend to take the following course of action.

Pursuant to Executive Order 12667, which was issued by President Reagan on January 16, 1989, I intend to instruct the Archivist not to release covered Reagan documents for at least 90 days. (The executive order requires the Archivist to delay openings at the instruction of the current President.) I have attached a draft letter to the Archivist for your review. The research community and media may raise some objections to this delay and in the interim may seek to influence the President's ultimate decision. In my view, however, we can rightly say for now that it would be entirely irresponsible for the President not to conduct a careful study of the many constitutional, legal, and policy issues implicated by the proposed opening of the Reagan records.

During the 90-day period, I will consult with Nick Calio and the Legislative Affairs office as to the possibility of a legislative solution. I also will consult with the Office of Legal Counsel at the Department of Justice on the privilege issues. In addition, I will seek the views of representatives of President Reagan and (to the extent appropriate) representatives of former Presidents Bush and Clinton on these issues. Finally, in consultation with the Department of Justice, I will prepare a recommendation for the President.

If your concur with this course of action, I will convey our position to the Archivist.

DASCHLE, GOP NEGOTIATORS START TALKS ON NEW SENATE POWER STRUCTURE

By Matthew Tully, CQ Staff Writer

June 5, 2001 - As Senate Republicans prepared for negotiations Tuesday afternoon over a new organizing resolution, the first crack appeared in their ranks.

Rhode Island Republican Lincoln Chafee, one of a dwindling band of GOP moderates, said he would not support a filibuster intended to win concessions from the new Democratic majority that will control the Senate beginning Wednesday.

"If we [filibuster the resolution] we really won't get anything done" all year, Chafee said.

Republican aides have raised the possibility of a filibuster to block a Democratic-crafted organizing resolution if it does not include compromises such as a guarantee that President Bush's judicial nominees can be brought to the floor.

Five Republicans appointed by outgoing Majority Leader Trent Lott, Miss., will meet with Democratic leader Tom Daschle at 5 p.m. to discuss "real broad concepts," a senior GOP leadership aide said. In addition to judicial nominations, the group will discuss rules for subpoenas and what would occur if Republicans regain control.

One of the group, Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico, has a plan that would require committee hearings and votes on judicial nominees within a certain period. If a committee missed its deadline, Republicans could use procedural tactics to place the nomination on the Senate floor calendar. Further action, however, would be subject to a filibuster.

A Democratic leadership aide called Domenici's idea unacceptable and said the party sees no need to make concessions on the issue. At the close of business Tuesday, Democrats will take over control of the Senate floor and all committee chairmanships as a result of the switch of Vermont Sen. James M. Jeffords from the GOP to independent status. Jeffords will caucus with the Democrats, to give them operational control, and joined them at Tuesday's party luncheon for the first time.

Democrats hoped to win approval Tuesday night of a resolution naming their dean, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, as president pro tempore, replacing South Carolina Republican Strom Thurmond. Byrd then would recognize Daschle as majority leader when the Senate convenes Wednesday.
